Nobody Knows. Very Sad
Why Die Young?
Locating Blood Clots
An Elastic Constitution

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

When wise old Rothschild arrived at the London Stock Exchange, his boots splashed with mud, he walked about, according to the old story, looking as dejected as he could look, selling securities on the left and right; he had the great advantage of knowing what happened and what was going to happen. He knew, and others did not know, that Wellington had won the Battle of Waterloo. The Napoleonic nightmare was removed from Europe and British securities must go up. While he was dejectedly selling, not too lavishly, according to the old story, numerous "gents were actively buying for him as prices went down.

He was the happy person who knows what is going to happen.

There is no such happiness in the United States just now for anybody; nobody knows what is going to happen.

We all know, of course, that prosperity will come back bigger than ever, but when?

We know that intelligence and hard work will continue to be better rewarded than stupidity and laziness.

We know, in short, that for the rest of this century and several centuries, capacity and selfishness will get the rewards.

But no man knows when the old system will return to working order, and many worry.

By the way, if you have "felt the depression" it may comfort you to know that the "great house of Rothschild" has also felt it, and is no longer the richest house in Europe. The French branch probably has some hundreds, possibly thousands of millions of francs left. But, they are francs from which 80 per cent of the value was shorn by government fiat.

You can imagine what has happened to the fortune of the Austrian Rothschilds, trying pumping money into banks that could not be kept alive. The same is said by those that should know to be true of the whole great Rothschild dynasty.

It is alleged that another interesting "richest European" has come to the surface, and it is not the Greek Zaharoff. .

Apparently, it is not necessary to die young if you live wisely. Edward Beard, head of the South Norwalk Savings Bank, in Connecticut, has just celebrated his 97th birthday, and works regularly at the bank. On his birthday, he had a pleasant talk with his brother, Augustus Beard, who motored over for an hour's chat. The brother is 101 years old.

Edward Beard, who has been president of that South Norwalk Savings Bank since he was 93, succeeded, at that age, former President Alden Sloman, who died at 95. Mr. Beard had been a director of the bank for 51 years.

The science of medicine announces another important step in treatment of disease. Dr. O. J. Dixon, of Kansas City, announces a method of locating blood clots in the circulatory system. The X-ray cannot locate the blood clot, and doctors with patients suffering from thrombosis can only wait patiently for the clot to travel its dangerous road, often causing death when it reaches the brain or the heart.

All doctors will want to know that Dr. Dixon finds it possible to locate the blod clot by injecting a liquid iodine compound, saturated with glucose, and chilled. The X-ray reveals the iodine traveling along the blood stream. When it stops, and its

GEORGIA UNDER MARTIAL LAW

By International News Service.

Atlanta, Sept. 17—Martial law was proclaimed for the entire State of Georgia by Governor Eugene Talmadge today.

The proclamation followed disorders resulting from the textile strike, which during two weeks have claimed one dead and resulted in scores of injuries. Mobilization of every unit of the National Guard already had been ordered.

The martial law proclamation was issued simultaneously with the launching of a campaign of wholesale arrests of strike pickets, 43 being placed under military arrest at Newnan, one of the most threatening points in the state.

THREAT TO SPREAD STRIKE

UNIONS GIVE WEEK FOR PEACE TO BE MADE

By Associated Press

Washington, Sept. 17—Francis J. Gorman, chairman of the textile strike committee, issued an ultimatum today that if the strike were not settled this week all remaining divisions of the industry would be called out.

At the same time, Gorman disclosed plans to have a resolution adopted by the approaching convention of the American Federation of Labor in San Francisco demanding the resignation of Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator.

The divisions which would be affected by Gorman's ultimatum are dyeing, rayon, underwear, knit goods and carpet and rugs, affecting approximately 100,000 workers.

The executive council of the United Textile Workers, comprising 17 members representing all divisions of the industry, will meet here tomorrow to decide on extension of the strike to all sections not yet affected.

Gorman asserted that threats of employers to re-open mills today, particularly in Georgia, had "all fizzled out." Adding he was informed that Rhode Island employers have asked to see Governor Green to make arrangements to open mills tomorrow, he said:

"I serve notice here and now that if they attempt to re-open the mills they will be responsible for what happens."

Gorman charged that governors of textile states had organized into "a strike-breaking union," and added that "today they have hundreds of our pickets in jail."

ENDEAVOUR LEADS IN RUN HOME

By TOM HORGAN
Associated Press Staff Writer

Aboard U. S. C. G. Cutter Argo, off Newport, Sept. 17—The defending American yacht Rainbow today led the British challenger, Endeavour, by 21 seconds at the half-way mark at the 30-mile windward-leeward course in the second race of the series for the historic America's Cup.

A few minutes after the two yachts turned the mark, Endeavour hoisted her Anna Oakley Spinaker and once it was started drawing, she blanketed Rainbow and at 2:17 went into the lead for the first time in the series.

Endeavour was doing much better in the strong breeze, which was as high as 16 knots at times, than she did in the light airs of Saturday, when the first race was declared no contest as the time limit of five and a half hours expired neither yacht across the line.

Rainbow led her at the 15 mile mark Saturday by 2 minutes 40 seconds, and increased that until she was leading by almost half a mile when the race was declared off.

Harold S. Vanderbilt, Rainbow's skipper, had the best of the start where T. O. M. Sopwith, owner-helmsman of the British boat had to luff to avoid striking the committee boat, and Vanderbilt held his weather berth through the two hour beat to windward.

BRITON GAINS ON RIVAL

As Rainbow turned the mark in to hours four minutes 9 seconds would cross the finish line under three and a half hours.

It was the fastest windward leg in cup race history, the best previous recorded time being the 2:06:40 mark, set by the Defender Vigilant in the third and last race of the 1892 series.

Endeavour showed a remarkable burs of speed during the last mile of the windward leg to close up much of the long lead Rainbow had established in the early phases.

She had overstood the mark slightly, but found a better slant of wind as she changed direction.

The two yachts engaged in a luffing match after turning the mark with Endeavour trying unsuccessfully to blanket the defender.

Both went off on a starboard

Morro Officer 'Begged' Own Boat Be Lowered

New York, Sept. 17—Testimony that Chief Engineer Eben S. Abbott, who quit the flaming Morro Castle without going to his engine room, begged to have his lifeboat lowered—a lifeboat containing only three passengers—was heard today at the resumption of the Department of Commerce inquiry into the disaster which took 134 lives.

Richard Kopf, of New York, a dining room steward, told how the officer, who had hastened to the lifeboat after sending down word to his black gang for "not a living soul to leave the engine room until they have to" begged repeatedly to have his boat lowered.

KOPF ALSO ON BOAT

Kopf, who admitted he escaped on the No. 1 boat which carried only three passengers and the rest seamen and members of the steward's crew, was asked on whose orders the boat was lowered.

"I didn't hear anybody order it lowered, but I heard the chief engineer beg to have it lowered," Kopf replied.

"The only actual order I heard was one from the bridge not to lower the lifeboat."

"But the chief engineer asked

W. R. Hearst Discusses a Free Press, Racial Issues, World Peace

Berlin, Sept. 16, 1934.

The following exchange of letters between William Randolph Hearst and Alfred Rosenberg, chief of the foreign political department of the National Socialist Party, was published in the German newspapers.

The correspondence resulted from a visit by Dr. Rosenberg to Bad Nauheim, where Mr. Hearst was requested to express his views on press censorship, racial problems and world peace.

Bad Nauheim.

QUESTION NO. 1—How far is so-called freedom of the press in various newspaper countries still feasible in the interest of world peace?

ANSWER—It is rather a delicate thing for me to answer this first question, because our ideas in America of the freedom of the press are so different from what they are in this country or in Russia.

The United States is a democracy. We believe in government by the people, and although we are having our difficulties in America along with the rest of the world, yet we have advanced under pure democracy from a little strip of unimportant colonies on the Atlantic seaboard to possession of the better part of the North American continent, and to

Killer Clues Sought in New Campus Grill

By JOHN H. NOONAN

Northfield, Sept. 17—Convinced that the shotgun slayer of the Rev. Elliott Speer, youthful principal of Mt. Hermon School, is a person on or near the school campus, detectives turned back toward the institution today for an answer to the mystery.

Although a somewhat wispy clue from Boston, involving a mysterious Maine motorist, and also a clue involving a southern collegian, formerly a Mt. Hermon student, were still being followed, they were made secondary as the investigators buckled down to a second questioning of persons in this locale.

TRACE MURDER GUN

This second grilling had a particular significance to the detectives, inasmuch as a man they consider as a likely suspect in the slaying, mainly because of his past record and his fiery temper, proved decidedly unsatisfactory in his first questioning.

To explain his vague answers in the initial grilling, this man is declared to have said he was under an opiate. He is also known to own a shotgun of a different size than the murder 15-gauge gun, but whether he owned also a 15-gauge gun is what the investigators wish to determine.

STATE LEADERS FAVOR CURLEY

By FRANK REILLY

James M. Curley, three times Mayor of Boston, will be chosen as the Democratic standard bearer on Thursday by a vote of landslide proportion, it was indicated today.

All doubt as to the outcome of the gubernatorial contest was swept aside today, according to observers, as 133 political leaders of the Commonwealth pledged their support to him.

So sudden was their action that Curley was unable to find time to meet each of the leaders himself. As a result he appointed five men to represent him.

The committee is headed by City Councillor Joseph McGrath of Dorchester. Other members are City Councillor Thomas H. Green of Charlestown, Chairman Maurice J. Tobin of the Boston School Committee, State Senator Joseph A. Langone, of North End, and Attorney Julian D. Rainey, of Roxbury.

The swing to Curley got underway yesterday when 3000 New Bedford Democrats voted unanimously to support his candidacy. Be-

TWO GUARDS GRILLED IN GETAWAY

Springfield, Sept. 17—In a spectacular dash for liberty, Alexander Kaminski, 24-year-old murderer awaiting the death sentence, sawed his way out of his cell to freedom in the Hampden County Jail today.

He escaped while a prison guard dozed within six inches of his cell.

Jail officials notified State Police and a squad of 50 State Police from the Monson barracks, aided by local authorities and jail guards scoured the surrounding territory.

The only trace was a report he was seen by a motorist near the King Phillip stockade in the Forest Park section an hour after his escape.

Meanwhile, within the jail, two special prison guards were undergoing a grilling on Sheriff David J. Manning's belief that inside assistance was given Kaminski.

The two guards, reserve officers, are Edward Berube and Paul Disanti. Questioned by Police Chief J. P. Fleming, Berube, who was guarding the prisoner from 4 p. m. until midnight, is said to have admitted he was asleep between 11 and 12 last night. Disanti, who relieved Berube, was on duty when Kaminski made his escape. The time of escape was placed at 4 a. m.

Kaminski was awaiting sentence for the murder of Merritt W. Hayden, a guard, who attempted to thwart his escape from the same jail last October, while Kaminski was serving a six months' sentence for carrying a revolver.

During the trial of Kaminski last March, Sheriff Manning was injured in the leg by Kaminski's younger brother, John, who was alleged also to have thrown a bomb in the courtroom, which failed to go off. The younger Kaminski is now serving a term in the Hampden County jail for attack on the sheriff.

Sheriff Manning charged today

New York, Sept. 17—Barney Ross, the welterweight champion, weighed in at 140½ pounds today for his championship bout with Jimmy McLarnin tonight. McLarnin scaled 146¼ pounds.

The champion's weight was a surprise. Not only did he hold his weight during the recent Jewish religious holidays and through the several postponements, but even added a quarter of a pound to his previous weight of 140 even. McLarnin weighed in at 145¾ pounds September 6.

As the fighters met in the office of the State Athletic Commission for the weighing in ceremonies, promoters announced prospects were very good for the fights going on tonight.

Physicians gave the battlers a final once over and pronounced both in excellent physical condition.

EDUCATOR'S SHOTGUN KILLER HUNT TURNS BACK TO CAMPUS

DEATH WEAPON IS TRACED ON NEW GLUES

P. Mahoney, executive officer of the uniformed forces.

His arrival was in the midst of a townpour which forced temporary abandonment of a plan to drag Shadow Lake, a quarter of a mile from the school, and to send a diver into the Connecticut river at Northfield bridge, two and a half mile distant, in search of the murder gun.

General Needham, after a survey of the murder premises, conferred with District Attorney Joseph Barrett, in charge of the investigation, and with the state detectives.

STORIES TO LEAD HUNT

During the conference, Richard L. Watson, one of the oldest faculty members and chairman of the work committee, and Thomas E. Elder, dean of the school, were sent for separately. Each remained closeted for about 10 minutes with the conferees.

Immediately afterward, General Needham told reporters that because of the intricacies of the case and the great amount of detail, additional detectives might be needed.

He said he intended to communicate with Captain John F. Stokes, in charge of the state detective force, and ask him to come to Northfield and supervise the investigation.

It is also planned, General Needham said, to have the more than 1,500 students who will have arrived at school tomorrow aid state troopers in searching for the murder gun. There were about 250 students here today.

So deeply have the investigators gone into the hunt for the macabre slayer that they are checking back along the summer trail of Dr. Speer in Canada, while he and his family were vacationing on a lake at Timagami, Ontario.

SEEK CLUE IN CANADA

During their stay, Speer built a camp and used native woodsmen and hunters on the project to aid him. The Canadian investigation is on the possibility that Dr. Speer might have incurred the enmity of a Canadian woodsman or Indian in a labor dispute.

This possibility as a lead to the slayer was looked upon today by the detectives, however, as remote and they concentrated their hunt on the campus and in the town.

Every student, faculty member and employe who was known to have been on or near the campus last Friday night when the 56-year-old headmaster met his death from a charge of buckshot fired through an open study window by a mysterious killer, faced questioning by District Attorney Bartlett.

LINKED TO THREATS

Police admitted today that a man, looked upon as a religious fanatic and known to have a violent temper, was under a 24-hour watch. The man was reported to have singled out individuals connected with the school and threatened them with physical harm unless they rejected the liberal ideas which had been introduced at Mt. Hermon since the advent of Dr. Speer as headmaster six years ago.

A thorough investigation was being made into this phase of the case today by state detectives and Lieutenants Albert Dasey and William Shimkus. Dasey declared:

"There is a possibility that the murderer of Dr. Speer may still be on the campus. Our investigation will overlook no person known to have been on hand at the time of the killing last Friday, from Dean Elder down to the humblest manual laborer on the school farm."

Also to be grilled are the 12 persons who were present in the handsome Speer residence at 8:20 last Friday evening when the fatal shot was fired.

In this group, none of whom witnessed the slaying, were Mrs. Charlotte Speer; her three daughters, Caroline, 12; Eleanor, 10, and Margot, four; the family's chef and maid, Mr. and Mrs. Constantine Georges, and their three children; Stephanie Wozniak, the nursemaid; and Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Welles, parents of Mrs. Speer.

SCORES QUESTIONED

Although nearly all the 500 students enrolled at the school thronged the picturesque campus today for the resumption of classes, only about 35 early arrivals were at the school last Friday night.

Satisfied that a man of religious prejudices, who has had contact with the school for a number of years has made known his feeling again Dr. Speer, authorities today sought to determine if the man ever made direct threats to the headmaster.

All persons who discussed with this man his feelings toward Speer were being questioned. The suspect himself will be questioned in detail.

No direct action by trustees of the school is contemplated until after police complete their investigation, Albert E. Roberts, executive secretary at Mt. Hermon indicated today. He said:

"Most of the faculty are of the belief that Dr. Speer met his death as the victim of some one with a disordered mind.

"The trustees and executive board of the institution will render every possible assistance to the authorities in seeking the murderer of our great leader.

"We are disposed to leave the entire investigation to the regular channels, as we feel the usual police process will best bring about the desired result."

Roberts emphatically denied rumors that any disgruntled former employe or faculty member of the school ever made threats against Dr. Speer's life.

In their search today police were guided by the belief that the murderer of the headmaster must have been a man who knew the campus thoroughly, who knew Dr. Speer's personal habits, a man who is a dead shot, and one who would kill for what would appear to normal persons as a slight or fanciful reason.

SUSPECT GIVES ALIBI

While a student or former student might have had the required knowledge of the place, clues pointing toward them as the killer to date have proven elusive.

A search for a former student of Mt. Hermon, now an undergraduate at Washington & Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, proved fruitless when the youth offered an alibi.

Informed that the Mt. Hermon graduate had uttered threats against Dr. Speer, police communicated with officials of the southern university and learned that the suspect had been seen at the college on Saturday morning. Although a fast driver might have covered the 500 miles between Northfield and Virginia in the 14 hours which elapsed after Dr. Speer's death and the time of the alibi, police were of the opinion that the youth could be eliminated from the case.

Lieutenant Dasey, however, today was ordered by District Attorney Bartlett to visit the university and check up on the alibi.

THEFTS BARED

Another former student today was being sought by New York state constabulary in the Lake Keuka district, near Syracuse, for questioning in connection with the killing. The district attorney said:

"Although evidence now in our possession probably eliminates both these suspects, we will obtain first hand information as to their movements on the night of the killing before we close the books on either of them."

A story told by John W. Bennett, of Northfield, first sent police on the trail of the student at Washington and Lee.

"I met this fellow in August while he was visiting in Northfield," Bennett told police. "He told me he was planning a wholesale vengeance of the school because he said he hadn't been treated right. He said he had arranged a 21-point plan of revenge and was carrying it out.

"I thought he was crazy. But when Dr. Speer was killed it flashed on me that Dr. Speer's death was point No. 8 in the 21-point plan."

District Attorney Joseph T. Bartlett said today that four autos were known to have been on the campus the night of the crime. Three of them had been satisfactorily accounted for, he said, but nothing could be learned about the fourth.

Youth Stealing Ride Faces Grill in Killing

Riding "blind baggage" on a train from Springfield and Worcester, a 21-year-old youth was arrested today at Back Bay station and taken to police headquarters for questioning as a possible suspect in the slaying of the Rev. Elliott Speer, principal of Mt. Hermon School, Northfield.

There is nothing definite against the youth, who identified himself as Verne F. Veihman (sometimes known as Frank Viehman) a native of Mt. Carmel, Ill., and a graduate of Alabama University last May 8.

Police said they had been telephoned and told a man was riding the train, but when they asked Springfield and Worcester police, officials at neither place knew of the call.

When asked the names of persons who could prove his identity, Veihman gave the name of a Boston bank official and the dean and officials of Alabama University.

The booking officer asked the charge, and Veihman, glancing down at his cinder-covered clothes and soot-stained hands, grinned and said cheerfully:

"You should charge me with larceny of coal."

He wore a signet ring with the initials "V. F. F." which he said was not his own ring originally. He explained:

"It was given to me by a girl friend who died a couple of years ago."

Veihman denied even hearing of the Mt. Hermon School murder and said that since graduation he had been roaming the country. He declared:

"I guess I'm what you'd call one of the army of unemployed."

Since he was 12, he said, he was had no permanent home and has none now. The last place of definite residence he gave as 1120 Eighth avenue, Tuscaloosa, Ala.

AIRCRAFT FIRM PAYS MILLION PER CENT

Washington, Sept. 17 (INS)—Profits of 1,143,725 per cent were made by stockholders of the Pratt and Whitney Aircraft Co., in eight years, the Senate munitions committee was told today.

When the company was organized in 1925, the original capital was only $1000. In the next eight years dividends totaling 11,437,250 were awarded stockholders.

Original investors were C. W. Deeds, George J. Mead, Fred Rentschler and Pratt and Whitney company.

The profits included cash dividends of $6,400,000 and stock dividends valued by the company at $5,037,250.

BIG SALARIES, BONUSES

C. W. Deeds, treasurer, testified that salaries and bonuses collected by the founders were: Rentschler, $1,553,759; Mead, $522,485, and Deeds, $293,789.

A large slice came from Navy Department purchases of Wasp 400 horsepower motors, Donald L. Brown, company president, testified.

In 1926, the company sold its entire output to the navy; in 1927, the navy sales were 80.7 per cent, Brown said.

NAVY OFFICER JOINS

Commander Eugene E. Wilson, chief advocate of the Pratt and Whitney engines, resigned from the navy's bureau of aeronautics to join the company on January 18, 1930, Brown testified.

Wilson since 1930 has drawn $147,863 in salary from the Pratt & Whitney company and subsidiaries.

Brown denied the navy actually developed the 400-horsepower motor, but admitted that the navy and his company "co-operated closely."

One navy order in 1926 amounted to $1,849,000.

BERRETT WINS 'PHOTO' FIGHT

Louis Berrett, who was acquitted with Clement L. Molway of the murder of Fred Sumner, Lynn billposter, through an 11th hour confession by the Millen-Faber trio, today won his fight to have his rogues' gallery photograph and fingerprints erased from the police records.

Commissioner Hultman ordered the removal.

With every circumstance seemingly stacked against him, Berrett and Molway went on trial last February in connection with the slaying of the Lynn bill-poster in January 2.

Several witnesses identified them as the slayers, and retracted only after the last minute Millen gang confession.

Berrett maintained that continued presence of his photographs among the criminals of the state was a "blot" on his reputation.

The Lynn records were also cleared by Police Chief James H. Broad.

Nile Floods Cairo

Cairo, Sept. 17 (INS)—The Nile river, overflowing its banks, held the city of Cairo in its grip today. Four pumping engines were rushed into use, but were not sufficient to prevent streets from flooding throughout the city.

TRIPLE DEATH JURY CHOSEN

Richard C. Schofield, 21, of Crescent road, Wellesley, junior at McGill University, Canada, and son of Dr. Otho L. Schofield, war-time surgeon of the A. E. F., went on trial today at Dedham before Judge Nelson P. Brown and a jury on three charges of manslaughter.

The charges resulted from an automobile accident in which three persons were killed and six injured on June 3, 1933, on the Wellesley-Natick turnpike, in front of Wellesley College.

Immediately after the jury had been selected today, Judge Brown granted the request of Assistant district Attorney Robert G. Clark, Jr., that the jury view the scene. Testimony will begin tomorrow.

In his opening address, Clark declared that Schofield operated an automobile which crashed into a car operated by Mrs. James McKenzie of Canton, who died a few hours after the accident. Roland Owen, 17, and Arthur Gay, 17, both of Natick, hitch-hikers riding with Schofield, were also killed.

ASTOR'S BRIDE SCOFFS AT BREAK BUT FLIES TO MOTHER

RICHEST YOUNG HUSBAND DUE TO FOLLOW

Newport, R. I., Sept. 17—John Jacob Astor, III, America's richest young man, slept late in his honeymoon mansion here today, while his bride of less than three months in New York offered repeated denials to queries that she and her husband had quarrelled and parted.

Mrs. Astor, the former "Tucky" French, left Providence hurriedly yesterday, barely making the Merchants Limited to New York after she and her husband had had a spat in a hotel lobby and wound it up on the sidewalk.

The abrupt parting in which there was no farewell hug but, rather a loud exchange of words as they sat in the Biltmore Hotel dining room, gave rise to continued reports that young Astor's unbridled tongue had again got him in hot water.

WHAT? A QUARREL

Mrs. Astor, questioned on her arrival in New York, denied all reports of a break. She said:

"A quarrel? Why, it is absolutely ridiculous! I came back because I'm going to be a bridesmaid at a wedding. Mr. Astor will come here at once."

But if young Astor planned to join his bride in New York today, he was not making any speedy arrangements to get there. At noon he was still "sleeping."

Just who had the last word remained a mystery, for while the heir to the Astor millions strode sputtering down the street his pretty young bride and a feminine companion jumped from the Astor limousine, rushed to the railroad station, and caught a train for New York.

The tiff began in the summer garden of the Providence Biltmore Hotel, where the couple have been in the habit of dining frequently. Another couple, unidentified, were with them.

Remarks exchanged during the meal apparently led to hotter ones in the lobby. As they climbed into the big limousine, waiting outside with a liveried chauffeur at the wheel, the hot-tempered Astor heir shook his finger in Ellen's angry face. Ellen stamped her foot.

"No, I won't," shouted the young millionaire, vehemently. "No, damn it, I won't."

ELLEN CHASES JOHN

And as Ellen climbed into the costly car, he turned his back on her and strolled down the street.

Like a dutiful wife, Mrs. Astor climbed back out of the auto and sped after him. After exchanging a few more words, the couple returned together.

Once more Ellen got into the car. But no sooner was she inside than Astor slammed the door and again strode down the street.

ROMANCE COOLING

This time Ellen did not follow. She sent the other man of the party in pursuit of her volatile young husband. As soon as he was out of the way, she seized her girl friend, jumped from the limousine and hurried to the nearby railroad station. The two girls had just time to purchase Pullman seats for New York on the Merchant's Limited before it pulled out of the station.

According to waiters at the hotel, the warmth of love's young dream in the Astor family has chilled appreciably in the few weeks that the couple have been dining there.

DIVORCE TO END CHATTERTON ROMANCE

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Universal Service Motion Picture Editor

Hollywood, Sept. 17—Ruth Chatterton, screen star, today stated that she will seek her freedom from George Brent in the Los Angeles courts.

News of the Chatterton-Brent divorce is no surprise. They have been living under separate roofs for six months or more.

TEMPESTUOUS ROMANCE

It was when Miss Chatterton went east on a holiday that they separated, both declaring at that time that it was merely a case of incompatibility.

The divorce of the first lady of the screen and her dashing Irish husband ends one of the most tempestuous romances in Hollywood. Mr. Brent met her when he was cast as her leading man in a series of screen plays.

Miss Chatterton then was the wife of Ralph Forbes, who a few days ago wedded Heather Angel in Yuma.

Upon Miss Chatterton's request, Mr. Forbes went to Reno and obtained a divorce. She married George Brent the following day in New York.

It was scarcely two years later when they separated, Mr. Brent explaining that it was a case of "temperament" and Miss Chatterton refusing to make any statement.

DESERTION CHARGED

The divorce petition to be filed today will be free from sensation. Mental cruelty and desertion, the two mildest complaints in the divorce category, will be given by Miss Chatterton as her reasons for wanting the legal separation.

Mr. Brent will not contest his wife's suit.

At the time his separation from Miss Chatterton was made public, Mr. Brent said he felt it was better for him to seek his own career apart from his wife's. Being married to an important star, he stated in an interview, made it difficult for him to be independent.

Mr. Brent since has been living in bachelor quarters and trying to re-establish himself on the screen.

Schoolgirl Mother, 11, Gives Up Books for Baby

The three R's and the little red schoolhouse in the Tennessee mountains will get scant attention, henceforth, from 11-year-old Mildred Morgan, one of the youngest mothers in American medical history. Until a few months ago, Mildred played with dolls. Now she has a real, live baby of her own. Her favorite textbook, for a while, will be one on the care and feeding of infants. The baby's dad, a schoolmate of the girl mother, is 11 years old. (Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

CAR HITS GIRL IN CHASE

Geraldine F. Rigley, four, of West Fifth street, South Boston, was slightly injured when hit by an auto driven, police say, by Mrs. Mollie Goldberg of Westmore street, Mattapan. Mrs. Goldberg said she was chasing a wedding party along E street, South Boston, when the accident occurred.

$2500 GRANTED VIVIAN HART

By International News Service

New York, Sept. 17—Vivian Hart, "Vanities" star who was graduated to light opera, is happily in possession today of the following items:

1, a sprinkle of freckles which she always had; 2, a few hardly noticeable scars on her neck where a patented lotion removed a few freckles and the skin with them, and 3, $2500 in cash for the pains she underwent in trying the remedy.

The last item is perhaps the most important of all. The comely singer filed her action in New York supreme court for $25,000. The lotion company failed to appear and default judgment of $15,000 was entered. The case later was reopened and Vivian got her $2500.

Mother, 11, Arrives Home With 'Miracle' Baby

By Universal Service

Kodak, Tenn., Sept. 17—Mildred Morgan, 11, mother of a baby daughter born a week ago, was "fetched home" to the mountain cabin here, where her mother is going to help her "raise the baby over a washtub."

The seven-and-a-quarter pound baby girl, with blue eyes and dark hair, was welcomed home in the simple mountaineer fashion, no one shashed by the circumstances of illegitimacy.

The girl's mother, Mrs. Huldah Cates, who announced proudly that she would take in washing to get the extra money that will be needed to care for her grand-daughter, looks upon the birth as a "miracle that just happened."

She said:

"It was like a miracle, that child—so young—having a baby."

No one is saying much about marriage of the young mother, who doctors say is the youngest on record in this section. A 14-year-old boy is believed to be the baby's father.

Mrs. Cates told the family that when she attempted to talk to the 14-year-old youth, he just ran away." The family laughed at it a joke had been told.

A stream of visitors viewed the young mother and baby at the Jefferson City Hospital, in Jefferson City, Tenn., where the baby was born last Sunday. She was not at all bashful in discussing her state, and proudly exhibited the child, who is normal in every way.

The baby was named Caroline Frankie, for the night nurse in attendance at the child's birth.

The schools will be starting next month but Mildred, who would be in the fifth grade, will not attend. She will be home looking after her baby.

BOBBY TODDLED OFF TO RACE

Robert McIntyre, 3-year-old "naturalist" of Judson street, Roxbury, has succumbed to the international yacht race influence and today switched his attention from lions, tigers and bears to boats.

The youthful "naturalist" set his course for Franklin Park zoo, but lost his bearing and sat down on a curbstone for a rest. He was found by Patrolman Edward A. Cook. Patrolman Cook took him to the station until he was claimed by Peter McIntyre, his father.

WIFE IS GRILLED

Police also summoned the suspected man's wife to the Warren avenue station and quizzed her for hours concerning her husband's activities. The couple were said to have known the Zuckerman girl.

The threat that the man made to Levine will be heard in municipal court today while more than a score of officers were tracing other angles to the knife murder of the young girl.

Meanwhile, a paroled convict, who formerly lived at the same address as John J. Horan, murdered in his room in Massachusetts avenue, three weeks ago, was questioned for hours by police.

HUNT TWO SUSPECTS

According to police, the man questioned was Raymond Ritchie, 24, now of Dover street, South End, already under arrest in connection with the hold-up of a Roxbury chain store Saturday night.

MORRO OFFICER ACCUSED BY STEWARD IN SHIP FIRE

to have it lowered, anyway?" asked Dickerson N. Hoover, chairman of the board of inquiry.

"Yes, sir," said Kopf. "He asked several times as soon as he got up to the boat."

"He said: 'Lower the boat. Lets lower the boat; let's lower the boat.'"

Hoover then asked:

"Did you hear Acting Captain Warms order the chief engineer into the boat?"

"No, sir," replied Kopf, "I did not."

HITS ABBOT'S STORY

Chief Engineer Abbott previously admitted he had left the ship in a lifeboat without going down to the engine room, but he said he left on the orders of the acting captain.

Kopf, a timid looking youth of about 23, also introduced highly significant testimony in regard to the locker in the ship's writing room. This was the locker which several witnesses testified exploded, as though it contained gasoline or kerosene. The fire is believed to have started in its vicinity.

Kopf said the locker which was supposed to be locked, was in fact unlocked and that he and at least one other member of the steward's crew and an unknown Cuban youth had had access to it while the Morro Castle was in Havana. The locker was packed with blankets.

"Who had charge of the lockers?" Hoover asked him.

"Ramos, a Cuban," replied Kopf. "He's dead now."

Q—Was he present when you looked into the locker in Havana?

A—Yes, he and a Cuban boy about 15. He was helping Ramos clean.

Q—Who was this boy? A—I don't know his name. He doesn't work on the ship.

Q—What? Doesn't work on the ship? He was helping clean—wasn't he a member of the crew?

A—No, he's a Cuban, same as Ramos. He got on in Havana to help him. He lives in Havana.

Kopf went on to explain that the pair were cleaning the writing room and library with rags—he couldn't see whether they were using any polish of any kind.

STORY SIGNIFICANT

The testimony was regarded as significant in view of the positive assertions of previous witnesses that forbidden, highly inflammable polish were smuggled aboard and hidden somewhere on the ship and that the origin of the fire was in or somewhere near the locker, and that the locker blew up.

Dr. S. Bregstein of Brooklyn, a passenger whose son, Mervin, 8, was lost, was the first witness today.

Reciting an incident on the trip to Havana in which he said he had difficulty getting lamb chops for the boy, Dr. Bregstein testified the head waiter told him he could have having trouble with his waiters, that they were insubordinate and that he planned to get rid of most of them when the boat got back to New York.

Dr. Bregstein said that after he was awakened at 4 o'clock (Eastern Daylight Time), by a passenger, who told him the ship was on fire.

"Were you assigned to any life boats," he was asked.

"I not."

SAW NO STEWARDS

Dr. Bregstein said tha tafter he had hurriedly dressed and hastened over the deck, it seemed that "it was everybody for himself."

"Did you see any stewards around?"

"No."

Dr. Bregstein was questioned closely concerning the assistance, or lack of assistance, of crew members. He was asked repeated times during the frenzied debate about of passengers, he saw no stewards and no officers. Nor, he added, did he see any notice in his stateroom telling him which life boat to go to in the event of an accident.

Dr. Bregstein sid into the water down a rope and was rescued by a lifeboat from the Monarch of Bermuda.

Asked about the morale and discipline of the ship's employes, he said he was not satisfied with the service given and cited an instance of what he considered rudeness and inefficiency on the part of a waiter.

Dr. Bregstein then volunteered:

"One day I saw an open can of paint on the ship. I noticed this because I overheard a painter and another crew member arguing about a job the former was doing.

"I thought it was pretty risky to have an open can of oily paint on the ship."

Bernard J. McNally of New York, of the steward's department, a storekeeper, testified that he became aware of the fire when he smelled smoke and later saw flames forward on B deck about 4 a. m. daylight time.

"I saw members of the crew assisting passengers", he responded in answer to questions regarding sailors' department.

He said they tried to persuade passengers to enter lifeboats, and that officers of the ship assisted passengers into life preservers.

Dickeron N. Hoover, head of the inquiry, questioned the witness about the use of inflammable polish on the Morro Castle.

SAW NO POLISH

McNally declared he knew nothing about this.

"It has been testified here that such material was used on the ship," Hoover said. "What do you know about this—"

"I never saw any brought on board or used on the ship," replied McNally.

"I am interested in the writing room locker in which the fire started," said Hoover. "Did you ever see the interior of that locker?"

"No, sir."

"Do you know what was kept in that locker?"

He said he did not, but quoted the librabrian, a Mr. Beck, as having said he kept writing materials in the locker.

He said he was awakened by the telephone operator and told fire had broken out.

"FIRE DOORS CLOSED"

Questioned regarding fire doors, McNally said that he saw them but could not describe them.

"Were those you saw open or closed?"

"Closed, as I remember."

Hoover said, "Then I shall have to ask you the leading question: Were the firedoors steel?"

McNaly said he "didn't remember," and was dismissed from the stand.

James Pond, second steward on the Morro Castle, testified that all members of the steward's department were capable and experienced.

"I picked them myself," he said.

Pond said he was informed of the fire at 3 o'clock, daylight time.

HELPED FIGHT FIRE

"I was in my stateroom when a night watchman came in and told me about the fire," he said.

"I dashed up on 'B' deck, saw flames in the writing room and assisted in the fighting of the fire."

Pond said he handled a hose, playing it on the fire through windows.

"We were gradually forced back by the swiftly spreading flames."

"I saw it would be impossible to extinguish the fire."

Passengers began streaming up on the deck, Pond continued, while he and several officers took charge of them.

"We pacified them led them down to "C" deck. I saw several passengers, in a panic, leap overboard.

"I dashed to my room and got my flashlight."

The witness told of going to staterooms, looking for passengers and collecting life-belts.

HEARD OVERBOARD CRY

Pond said the smoke became so thick he could scarcely see and that passengers were told to descend to D deck.

"I heard a man, a passenger, shout:

"Come on, let's go overboard —what are you waiting for?" anothre one said to him.

"What are you standing around for, you women?"

He said he saw a boy slide down a rope and into the sea.

"The child just paddled over to a lifeboat and was saved. Others were sliding down the ropes and leaping over the side," he said.

"The fire seemed to lick right along the decks and bulkheads. There seemed to be nothing to retard its advance."

BEYOND CONTROL

Pond declared that when he first saw the fire it was beyond control.

"Did you notice anything particular about the fire—its rapid spread?"

"No sir, I did not. I would say the wind fanned the fire swiftly through the ship."

He said that he was responsible for lifeboats in the lockers and "some of the rooms."

He testified that Captain Willmott customarily excused men on duty from attending fire and boat drill.

The second steward testified that he would have taken away any inflammable polishes and discharged those found using them. However, he remarked, he had never discovered any such materials.

Hoover persisted in questioning witnesses minutely about the writing room locker, source of the fire.

THREE HAD KEYS

Pond said that he "knew the locker well," had permanently supervised the placing therein of blankets last April.

Three men, crew members, had keys to that locker besides himself, the witness said.

Hoover asked Pond about the personnel of the stewards—their nationality in particular.

"The stewards were of mixed nationalities," Pond replied. "Most of them were Americans."

"What do you know of drunkenness among the crew?" Hoover questioned. "Was there any?"

"DRUNK IN PORT"

"Naturally," the witness responded, "when we were in port some of the stewards got drunk, but not on duty. I would not permit it."

"There has been some criticism that such a large number of the crew escaped and so many passengers did not. Why was that?" Hover asked.

Pond expressed the opinion that many passengers had jumped overboard prematurely.

that Kaminski had been aided in his escape by jail guards. He accused unnamed subordinates of smuggling files and a gun to the man.

GUARD FALLS ASLEEP

The escape was made despite the most drastic precautions ever taken in this county for the safekeeping of a criminal. Three special guards, working in eight hour shifts were on duty at all times.

Edward Berube, reserve officer in the Springfield police department, was on duty during the middle watch ending last night at 11:40. He told Sheriff Manning that he and James DiSanti, also a reserve officer, who relieved him made the routine examination of the prisoner and his cell at that time.

He declared that Kaminski was searched thoroughly and that every portion of his cell was given a close scrutiny but that not the slightest thing was found amiss.

DiSanti admitted that he had fallen asleep and did not know that Kaminski had escaped until he awakened to find that his prisoner had fled.

BARS FORCED APART

A bar three-quarters of an inch in thickness had been filed through and bent outward. With the space provided by the removal of the bar, Kaminski was able to secu.i enough leverage to push the other bars apart sufficiently to allow his body to pass through.

Once through the cell door Kaminski was far from freedom. Facing him was a three-inch steel door leading to the jail kitchen. He could not have gone through this unless the door had been left unlocked or he had been provided with keys. Sheriff Manning immediately launched an investigation along this line.

The first eye-witness story of the escape came from Edward Secale, a regular prison guard. He told Sheriff Manning that he had just admitted a crew of bakers reporting for work at 4:30 a. m. and was continuing his rounds when he heard the steel door open.

GUN IN STOMACH

He swung quickly around to find a revolver pressed into his stomach and the desperate murderer whispering:

"Say nothing."

He declared that he was too astounded to act and since he was unarmed, as it is against jail rules to carry a gun, he could do nothing but obey Kaminski's commands.

The escaping convict backed Senecale into a corner and kept him covered while he filed the bars on the door through which the bakers had come a few minutes before.

20-FOOT DROP

After Kaminski had reached the jail yard he was forced to climb an 18-foot waterspout to the top of the jail wall. From there it was a 20-foot drop to the tracks of the New Haven Railroad which back up to the jail at this point.

This is the second time Kaminski has escaped from the same jail. In October, he and Paul Wargo, serving a six-month sentence, were found by Guard Hayden while sawing a bar in their cell. Hayden was given such a terrific beating that he subsequently died. The two men scaled the wall just as Kaminski did this morning.

Wargo was captured a few hours later, but Kaminski was not caught until two months later in Virginia.

The two were put on trial before Judge Nelson P. Brown, of Millers Falser fame, and a jury. Wargo was found guilty of second degree murder and immediately sentenced to life imprisonment.

What I Like About Filene's Would Fill a Book—

Here's just a small, but important reason why I love to shop there. Having become quite "kerchief-minded" after reading in fashion magazines how tremendously important is the delightful new tuck-in neckline, I determined right then and there that I simply must have not one but many glorious new Kerchiefs to give my frocks that tuck-in neckline—to put a flip of 1935 dash into my suits, dresses, coats. So, of course, I trotted right up to Filene's knowing that if tuck-in Kerchiefs are good fashion Filene's would have them on hand. Even though I have learned to expect a lot from Filene's I was delightfully surprised to find a whole corner in the Neckwear Shop crammed with the grandest ascots, dickies, kerchiefs, kerchiefs and more kerchiefs. And are they grand? You'll want several to give that colorful splash without which an outfit is dead this Fall. TUCK-THEM-IN, in sequins, metal, wool, silk. And you'll be amazed to find that they're priced at only $1, $2 and $3. There's a perfectly gorgeous selection at $1. The Monogramed wool Kerchief sketched is only $1. See them in Filene's Neckwear Shop. It's bound to be the most exciting corner in Boston right now.

CLUB WILL BE SOLIDLY FOR CURLEY

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

It will be "Curley or nothing" so far as the Hendricks Club endorsement of Democratic gubernatorial candidates is concerned, it was learned today as the call was issued for a meeting tonight of the famous West End political organization.

Omission of the anual Sunday-before-primary meeting of the club for the first time in 50 years and failure to endorse a gubernatorial candidate before this late date are accepted by observers to be evidence of the former mayor's growing strength among club-members.

Joseph Lomasney, treasurer and brother of the late "Mahatma" Martin Lomasney, and Councillor John I. Fitzgerald are known to be strong Curley backers. The meeting tonight has been called in an effort to get the members' sentiment so a full slate can be endorsed before the night-before-primary meeting on Wednesday.

BALLOTS SENT OUT

The club has not as yet decided on endorsements in the congressional fight and the battle for district attorney.

Secretary of State Frederic W. Cook today disclosed that 2,104,350 ballots have been distributed to the cities and towns for use in the state primaries next Thursday.

Of these, approximately the same number as was sent out two years ago, 1,186,500 are Republican ballots and 934,850 Democratic.

In the 1932 primary, only 727,964 ballots were used. The Republicans in that year cast 418,712 and the Democrats 309,252. Of these 154,031 were cast in Boston, split up as follows: Democrats, 118,410; Republicans 35,641.

HEAVY BOSTON VOTE

Election experts expect that this year in Boston, because of the intense Democratic governorship conflict, and the record primary registration, about 295,000, that close to 500,000 ballots will be needed. A slight drop in the Republican vote is looked for, but the expected heavy Democratic vote in Boston and the larger cities, it is figured, will bring the total in the two primaries close to the 800,000 mark. Nearly 2500 candidates are in the field.

Of all these contests, the battle between former Mayor James M. Curley and General Charles H. Cole for the Democratic nomination for governor, stands forth in a class by itself.

The former mayor, combating the combined forces of Senator David I. Walsh, Governor Joseph B. Ely and a host of lesser party leaders, is looked upon now as having victory within his grasp.

WORK, WAGE ISSUE

Recognized as the foremost exponent of the new deal, Curley continues to drive home the issue of works and wages and the right of the voters to select their own candidates, free from the dictates of the "bosses of the Worcester steamroller convention."

The Curley forces are not only predicting that his plurality over Cole in Boston will be more than 50,000, but are claiming every city in the state, not excluding Westfield, the home city of the governor.

In betting circles, there is very little Cole money in sight. What few bets have been recorded so far, it is stated, were made on the basis of 7 to 6 on Curley. There is ample Curley money ready to take on all comers.

The Curley campaign will reach its climax next Wednesday night at a gigantic victory rally in Symphony Hall.

MANSFIELD STRIKES

Entering the contest for the first time, Mayor Frederick W. Mansfield, over the radio, placed the blame for the $4.30 increase in the Boston tax rate on Curley. He claimed that the rate was the result of "extravagance" of Curley.

General Cole, in East Boston, South End, Charlestown, East Cambridge and Somerville, predicted his own nomination by "an overwhelming majority."

At the Charlestown and Somerville rallies, Senator Walsh also spoke, appealing for the nomination of Cole and the rest of the Worcester convention endorsed state ticket.

Cole reiterated his loyalty to President Roosevelt and the New Deal. He asserted that former Mayor Curley, based on the record of past vote getting ability, could not beat the Republican nominee in any event.

MANY COLE RALLIES

Cole and Senator Walsh will speak in a number of rallies in Boston and vicinity, principally in the Henry L. Pierce School, Ward 17, Dorchester; Cole headquarters, Upham's corner, Dorchester, and Cole headquarters, Broadway, South Boston.

Senator Walsh is also slated to appear at Cleary square, Hyde Park, and General Cole at the Natick High school and Germania hall, West Roxbury.

Tomorrow night the Cole forces will gather at Tremont Temple to stage the "big victory" rally. Governor Ely will be one of the principal speakers.

Naval Vets Meet in Somerville

The 47th annual National Convention of the National Association of Naval Veterans of the United States convened today in Malta Temple, Somerville, assisted by the National Women's Auxiliary.

Admiral Loomis Seofield, 89, of New Canaan, Conn., presided. Included in the company, many of whom are veterans of the Civil War, were George A. Parsons, 89, of Everett, Henri Batchelder, 92, of Everett, and Charles Peel, 91, of Salisbury.

CURLEY GETS CHIEFS' SUPPORT

By FRANK REILLY

cause of numerous engagements the former mayor was unable to go to that city to accept this pledge of support formally and Tobin appeared there in his behalf.

Hardly had this news reached Mr. Curley when former City Councillor Francis E. Kelly, of Dorchester, informed Curley leaders era that the Kelly Democratic Organizations of Ward 15, Dorchester, would support him.

An hour later John R. Driscoll of Springfield, representing 55 Democratic leaders of Western Massachusetts, arrived in Boston and informed Curley he had been delegated to pledge their support to his candidacy. Telegrams of acceptance of this support were forwarded to each of the leaders by Mr. Curley.

MRS. MELANSON AIDS

As the shift to Curley got under way Mrs. Theodore Melanson, leader of a group of South End and Back Bay women who had been supporting the candidacy of General Charles H. Cole, communicated with the former mayor and informed him that she and her associates are convinced that he is the man best qualified to carry out the Roosevelt recovery program in Massachusetts. For that reason she said they will cast their votes for him on Thursday.

Through the night numerous telegrams from Democrats of all sections of the Commonwealth were received at the Curley residence in Jamaicaway. Pledges of support continued to pour in today. President John F. Dowd of the Boston city council predicted that Mr. Curley would carry his district, Ward 8, Roxbury, by 12 to 1.

Former Mayor Curley will speak in seven nearby cities tonight as well as at rallies in six Boston wards.

MANY RALLIES TONIGHT

His program calls for appearances at Grange Hall, Wilmington, Woburn Common, Old Armory Hall, Stoneham, at Manhattan Hall and at Harvey street and Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, K. of C. Hall, Somerville, North Quincy High School, Rice School, South End, the Municipal building, that district, Hemingway School, Dorchester, Roslindale Municipal building, Blackstone School, West End, and at Teachers College.

More than 10,000 Bostonians turned out to pay tribute to Curley last night. Traffic was blocked in Washington street, South End, for more than a half hour while the former mayor addressed a gathering of over 4500 persons in the Grand Opera House.

At the Majestic Theater 1500 persons could not gain admittance. There the Curley address was heard by means of a sound wagon.

He said in part:

"The only issue in this campaign is work and wages. My opponent has avoided this issue. As a result I will win the gubernatorial nomination by a vote of better than 4 to 1.

"With all doubt as to the outcome of this contest now removed I want to tell my friends that I have at times had difficulty in maintaining self-restraint. I have been villified by character assassins. I have been the target for the abuse of irresponsible persons. Persons in high places, tossing honor to the winds, have joined in this movement.

"Only a week ago Governor Ely, with a view to inciting riot, went into my old home district, Roxbury, the district he has chosen to call a slum, and with more than 100 State and Boston police put on a demonstration which would put Huey Long to shame.

"I did not intend that any such occurrence as that planned by Governor Ely should take place and for that reason, I invited 400 of my own friends to occupy every available seat in that hall. It is now a matter of record that no disorder took place.

POINTS TO RECORD

"In contrast to the Ely methods I went into his home town, Westfield, taking with me only my old and dear friend, Rabbi Maranville, who, unfortunately, in using crutches at this time. As I had expected there was no hostile demonstration. Little Joe Ely could have gone into Roxbury alone and been accorded every courtesy. Little Joe knew that.

"In 1932 when my opponent as a trustee of the Boston Elevated Railway permitted the discharge of 1000 workers, I as Mayor, was providing jobs for 3000 veterans.

Nearly 36 million persons are depending upon the great hearted Franklin D. Roosevelt to prevent starvation in America. If his program were halted tomorrow there would be riot and bloodshed in every city of America. Thank God not Little Joe Ely, but great, big Roosevelt is our President.

"We have had five years of hungry children. It is about time we did something about it. We can change it if we stand together."

LINDYS LAND IN DESERT TOWN

Blythe, Cal., Sept. 17 (AP)—The 110 degree heat was forgotten today while residents beamed upon two unexpected visitors, Colonel and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh.

The Lindberghs, on the last leg of a transcontinental airplane journey to Los Angeles, arrived at dusk Sunday and expected to fly on to the Coast today. The Colonel brought his small monoplane down on an emergency field four miles from town, rather than chance a night flight to Los Angeles.

Owner of Burned Building Sought

A fire of undetermined origin destroyed the third floor and roof of a two-family unoccupied dwelling on Riverside avenue, Medford. Police were today searching for the owners of the building, which has not been occupied for several years.

Wise girl Polly... Popular girl Polly...

She always removes her make-up thoroughly the Hollywood way

Her complexion's always exquisite—never a trace of ugly COSMETIC SKIN

"POLLY'S a wow..."Polly's a dream!" Fun to be admired, as Polly is, because of her exquisite skin!

Polly never risks the complexion trouble many modern girls have! No bits of old make-up clog Polly's pores . . . enlarging them, causing dullness, blemishes—those unwelcome signs of Cosmetic Skin.

The reason is simple . . . wise little Polly always removes make-up thoroughly the Hollywood way—with gentle Lux Toilet Soap!

Cosmetics Harmless if removed this way

Cosmetics need not harm even delicate skin unless they're allowed to choke the pores. Many girls who think they remove rouge and powder thoroughly actually leave bits of old make-up in the pores, day after day. No wonder they get Cosmetic Skin!

Lux Toilet Soap is made to remove cosmetics thoroughly. Its ACTIVE lather sinks deeply into the pores, carries away every vestige of dust, dirt, stale cosmetics. Before you apply fresh make-up—ALWAYS before you go to bed at night, use this gentle, pure soap!

Of course I use cosmetics, but I never worry about Cosmetic Skin. I use Lux Toilet Soap regularly!

RUSSIANS SEEK TO DRIVE U. S. INTO LEAGUE

By WILLIAM HILLMAN
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

Geneva, Sept. 17—Moscow is trying to build a bridge between Geneva and Washington.

The Kremlin, triumphant in erecting another wall of defense against Japan behind the citadel of the League of Nations, now is seeking to involve the United States in commitments.

These commitments by the United States would afford the one safeguard Russia still needs against Japan. They would represent, in part, Russia's repayment to France for France's efforts in behalf of Moscow.

LITVINOFF'S REPLY

This is the only interpretation to be placed upon the startling reply of Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet foreign commissar, to the invitation to join the league. In it he says:

"The Soviet government is especially glad to be coming into the league at the moment when the question of an amendment to the covenant in order to bring it into harmony with the Briand-Kellogg pact and to banish international warfare is being considered."

Now, as a matter of fact, the question of harmonizing the covenant with the Kellogg pact was taken off the agenda of the assembly a week ago and postponed until the next assembly—that is, next year. Russia's sudden thrusting of the subject into the limelight gives rise to the belief that the Soviets will ask the league to reconsider and replace the subject upon the agenda of the current assembly.

ONE STEP FURTHER

Why? Because Litvinoff would like the league to make an effort to get the United States to agree to one step further than Norman H. Davis, American ambassador-at-large, went in Geneva on May 22, 1933. Davis, on the instructions of President Roosevelt, then announced that the United States was willing to abandon its traditional neutrality, making possible non-interference on the part of the United States with sanctions taken by league powers against a violator of the Kellogg pact.

shadow ceases to move forward, the blood clot is located, and can be removed surgically. That should save many lives.

The United States is, just now, celebrating the 147th anniversary of the signing of the Constitution, with many speeches, and protestations of devotion. Sons of the American Revolution take part because they feel that it is, in some peculiar way, their constitution. The Women's National Republican Club is also making a great fuss about the Constitution. The ladies say that President Roosevelt and his professors have made it look like a sieve, or wide section of Swiss cheese. Friends of the New Deal say it is an elastic constitution, a sort of boa-constrictor arrangement that can swallow anything and swell out enough to hold it. If it could swallow and digest so many other things why not NRA?

Next month the New Deal will give to cotton farmers, as a "parity payment," and for NOT planting cotton the sum of $72,500,000.

That is considerable money, even in these "loose" days: $72,500,000 should help, especially as it is paid to farmers, not for working harder than before, but for working less than before.

There is always a catch, however. Other nations are planting more cotton, as we plant less, and they are seizing the world's market. You read about a gentleman returning from Brazil who learned that Brazilian farmers had doubled their cotton crops, and, thanks to us, had doubled their prices.

To farmers $72,500,000 cash looks like a rainbow now. But it may seem less beautiful if, as Europe predicts, our present encouragement of small crops results in United States cotton growers losing their foreign markets. This country cannot use all the cotton it can produce. The farmers cannot eat it, only a little cotton seed oil on salad. If our encouragement of smaller crops results in giving the world's markets to other countries, that will bring another problem. But, perhaps, "one thing at a time" is a good motto.

New York's national guard training camp is closed for the season, having given physical, military training, and a healthful outing, with plenty of physical exercises, to 21,000 men. The government paid the bill, of course, and it is good to know that so many men have been trained and improved physically.

But, the amount of money spent on those 21,000 guardsmen could have trained at least 1000 fliers, and if we ever have a real war, with any real attack, 1000 fliers would be worth more than all the national guards in the United States put together. That is, if this nation, particularly incompetent in preparation for trouble, had enough airplanes for the 1000 fliers.

W. R. Hearst Discusses a Free Press, Racial Issues, World Peace

a position of power and prosperity at least equal to that of any nation in the world.

The successful conduct of a genuine democracy requires that the mass of the people, who by their vote direct the government, be fully and accurately informed concerning events and opinions everywhere.

To provide this summary of events and variety of opinion, an absolutely free press is favored by the public and protected in the basic Constitution of the land.

No one maintains that our press or any press is perfect, but our contention and our belief are that the disadvantages and dangers of a controlled press are a thousand times greater than the difficulties which arise occasionally from abuses of press privileges.

Sometimes the opinions of our editors, or of some of them, do not meet the approval of politicians, sometimes these opinions do not meet the approval of the public. But a newspaper which is habitually unpopular in its opinions or inaccurate in its statements loses influence and patronage, too, and disappears.

THOSE circumstances are sufficient restraints upon undue license upon the part of the press, and very few newspapers in the United States abuse their privileges.

Difference of opinion in our country is not considered an abuse. Debate is desired. Criticism is tolerated.

All public men in our country are subject to criticism and do not particularly object to it. If the criticism is deserved they learn from it. If it is undeserved, it does them no actual harm, because they are justified and the critic is confounded by events which establish beyond controversy what is true and right.

When the Great War was on, I tried to keep my country out of it. I felt that we would secure nothing by going into it except the loss of our lives, the loss of our wealth, and the antagonism of foreign nations with which we had been at peace.

No one was ever subjected to severer criticism than I was. It was difficult to sustain when I knew that I had only the good of my country at heart. But in the end I was justified by the event.

We had many of our fine young men killed and maimed. We wasted our wealth. We went deeply into debt. We were swindled by our allies who repudiated their obligations, and we were hated for having befriended them.

Most people in the United States now believe that our country would have been much better off if we had stayed out of the war.

I am sure we will stay out of the next one.

You people in Europe can have the next war all to yourselves and I do not think there will be much of Europe left after it.

QUESTION NO. 2—Have not other countries, for example America with its black and white question, a racial problem to solve?

ANSWER—Races differ in degree. There is a great deal of difference between the people of Europe and the people of Africa—a great difference between Europeans and Asiatics. There is very little difference between the various peoples of Europe.

The peoples of Europe are different tribes, that is all. Their wars are tribal warfare. They speak different dialects. Their manners and customs are very largely the same. Their ideals and objectives are very similar.

Warfare between European nations is wholly unnecessary. To realize how unnecessary it is, you should come to the United States and see there the same peoples who live in perpetual warfare over here, living in permanent peace and good fellowship in America.

A conflict of Europeans with Asiatics might be a different matter. In such a case, there would be conflicts of habits and customs, of law and religion, of living standards, of moral standards, of social and political ideals, of basic civilizations.

A VICTORY of Asia over Europe would change the character of the civilizations of the world.

All that European wars do is to change boundaries here and there. Look over the maps of Europe for the past thousand years. Boundaries are continually changing, but the people are the same and the civilization is the same.

To my mind, the most sinful thing in the world is to wage murderous wars, slay millions, destroy untold wealth, plunge all peoples into depression, wreck homes and families, endanger Occidental civilization and supremacy, just to move boundaries a few miles one way or the other, and then fight another murderous war to move them back again.

There should be an United States of Europe, with all European peoples living in peace, and ready only to defend their Occidental civilization against Oriental invasion.

Europe would better build its wealth and progress in peace, and reserve its strength against the day of possible danger from the Orient.

That was the late Kaiser's dread, and in that at least he was right.

QUESTION NO. 3—What tasks lie before world policy to bring about true and lasting peace?

ANSWER—The first necessary step for peace is the desire for peace, and the basis of peace must be justice.

The second step might be an honest co-operative union of European nations for genuine mutual advantage.

The third step would be universality of language.

Leaders might as well cultivate the desire for peace—the peoples already possess it.

Ruling classes should realize that their people will not be led into disastrous wars much longer.

What country benefited from the last war?

Every nation is practically bankrupt. Progress has been set back a hundred years. There is not only the suffering of war for the people but the misery which follows.

The next war will be more destructive, the subsequent disasters greater, the resentment of peoples more intense. Governments will be overthrown, upper classes will be leveled in the dust, blood will flow, famine will stalk, and Europe will be united at last under the crimson flag of anarchy.

Better that Europe should be united in peace and order, and under conditions of civilization and progress.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

FOLLOWING is the text of Alfred Rosenberg's reply to Mr. Hearst's authorized comments given in answer to the three questions submitted to him in writing.

Berlin.

Dear Mr. Hearst:

Many thanks for your letter, which is of special value to me in view of the personality who wrote it.

If our views differ in some points, this can be explained by the difference in the history and position of the United States and Germany.

The United States: an enormous area which is incompletely inhabited; Germany, an over-populated country, which naturally must also develop another way of living, in view of Germany's two-thousand-years history of struggle amidst very different surroundings.

I believe, however, I can state that it is yours as well as national Socialism's endeavor to build a government which is not hovering over the people but stands within the people, but that the forms are different for many reasons.

Furthermore we are convinced that the press and other means of forming public opinion must put restrictions to their own freedom wherever subjective opinion might conflict with the right of the entire nation.

How unbridled liberty can poison relations between nations has been shown repeatedly in our days, it very often brought great disasters to the peoples.

ESPECIALLY as we have the same opinion as you that all nations must be spared a repetition of this terrible disaster, we want, as far as Germany is concerned, to avoid by all means anything whereby embitterment and estrangement, even hatred, could originate between nations. We therefore appreciate doubly your upright attitude towards the question of the outbreak of the World War and its results.

Europe actually has been thrown into terrible disaster by the peace travesty of Versailles (Rosenberg used the word "Unfrieden"). But I believe your great country could also co-operate in the improvement of conditions on the European continent, because the fates of Europe and America are yet very closely connected, and this community of fates cannot be severed without great sacrifices for all.

Concerning Germany itself, the German nation cannot yet forget that it, trusting the word of your great President, once laid down its arms and thereby later on, and through the violation of solemn promises by others, the irrational act of Versailles became victorious.

That Europe as a whole has to experience one common fate in the face of the rest of the world is also deeply felt in the consciousness of national Socialism.

But we do not believe this consciousness can arrive at the form of an United States of Europe, because all the preparations of thousands of years of history are not the same as were those in the case of the rise of the United States of America.

I, THEREFORE, in November, 1932, in Rome, expressed the idea that the four great European powers, Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany, must first find a basis of understanding in order to assist in the pacification of other geographical areas in Europe in the interest of all (northeastern area, Danube area, etc.).

This idea found its preliminary expression in the so-called four-power pact, but it lies in the character of a new idea that realization, even if it appears pressingly necessary, requires a long time to assume a politically effective form.

With special joy I have read the third part of your letter, which is completely in accordance with what our leader in many speeches again and again emphasized before the entire world: that to assuage the wounds of the World War, a constructive will for peace must be wakened in all nations.

Germany has tirelessly endeavored to lead the disarmament conference to a happy end, and in this connection we remember respectfully the same efforts by the American delegation.

Unfortunately, a solution has been pushed further and further away, and despite solemn obligations some countries have started an armament race such as never existed in the world before.

THEREFORE the idea of disarmament, or at least general restrictions of armaments, has been all but dropped and Germany was refused any practical equality.

States armed to the teeth still complain they are not being safe and continue arming, whereby arises so dangerous a situation for others that only a great man will be able to ban such dangers.

Doubly happy, therefore, are such energetic statements as yours, publication of which means a great gain for peace, so necessary in Europe and the world.

I, therefore, was especially happy to make your acquaintance, and wish you good progress in your cure, and wish you power to continue to work in the spirit of progressive understanding between nations.

Yours respectfully,
ALFRED ROSENBERG.

MOSES CHOICE OF MACY FOES IN NEW YORK

By Associated Press

New York, Sept. 17—In a surprise move Republican leaders opposed to W. Kingsland Macy have chosen Robert Moses, park commissioner of New York city, as the candidate they will support for the Republican nomination for governor.

His selection was announced by F. Trubee Davison, leader of the anti-Macy forces, after a meeting of more than 30 old guard Republicans at the Davison home last night. Along with Davison's statement was one by James W. Wadsworth that he would not be a candidate for governor but would seek re-election to the House of Representatives. Wadsworth had been prominently mentioned as the anti-Macy group's gubernatorial candidate.

Macy, whose tenure as Republican state chairman is threatened by the revolt against him, had said before Moses' selection he would fight for the nomination of Samuel Seabury, independent Democrat. Macy asserted the real issue was whether the Republicans would be reactionary with the nomination of Wadsworth or progressive with Seabury.

Moses, although a Republican, was a close advisor of former Governor Alfred E. Smith.

RIOTS IN TEXTILE STRIKE MOVE TO MAINE

eral women who defied the pickets to return to work.

So tense was the situation in Maine that additional National Guardsmen were called to augment the forces already on duty in Biddeford, Lewiston, Augusta, Skowhegan, Brunswick and Sanger ville.

The disorder at Waterville today, followed a night of activity by labor representatives, during which mill officials were threatened by a mob and ordered to leave the mill district.

At an early hour 200 strikers gathered at the mill gates and defied national guardsmen to hoot and jeer workers as they returned to their jobs in the Lockwood Manufacturing Company cotton mill.

Women operatives dashed through a barrage of flying stones but none was injured. Union officials claimed that half of the company's normal force of 500 had joined the strike.

Additional militia were ordered into Biddeford and Saco, the largest textile center in the state, as labor leaders concentrated activities there in an effort to close the Pepperell Company Mills and the York Mills.

Labor officials estimated that 10 per cent of the 3500 workers in the Pepperell Mills had joined the strike and 25 per cent of the 700 workers in the York Mills in Saco had responded to the strike call.

Outside Pickets Barred by Union

In announcing that approximately 4000 textile operatives in Maine had joined the strike, Amede Cyr, strike organizer, declared that outside pickets or agitators would not be tolerated.

Harold Whitehead, agent of the Pepperell mills, said that he believed 90 per cent of the employes desired to work free of "outside interference."

The presence of the battalion there, and 600 other troops in Lewiston, Augusta and Skowhegan was described as "solely a precautionary measure to ensure peace and order," after reports that flying squadrons from R. I. and other centers, were intending to rush through the state border guard patrol set by Governor Louis Brann.

Lewiston, focal point for labor demonstrations in union announcements, saw little strike activity. Union plans to picket mills in Brunswick, failed to materialize while a National Guard unit waited as the strike entered upon its third

Both Sides Watch Injunction Pleas

At Fall River interest of mill executives and strikers centered today in two superior court petitions for injunctions against officials of the United Textile Workers Union.

The petitions which will be heard in Fall River and Taunton were filed by officials of the Mt. Hope Finishing Company of North Dighton and Defiance Bleachery in the Barrowsville section of Taunton.

With the exception of picketing at American Printing Company, striker's activities were at a standstill.

All plants remained closed today as teh strike entered upon its third week.

The storm centers of New England's textile strike, Saylesville and Woonsocket, where rioting last week cost the lives of two persons, returned to nearly normal conditions today, except that mill machinery was stilled and militia remained on duty.

Virtual martial law that had existed in Woonsocket since Wednesday night's rioting and looting was ended when Police Commissioner J. Hector Paquin announced that police had take over the control of the city and that the National Guardsmen on duty in that area would act as auxiliaries only in the event of trouble.

Mill owners were reported to be considering the reopening of all Woonsocket mills simultaneously in an effort to break the backbone of the strike of that city's independent union.

Dancing and the sale of liquor were still banned in Woonsocket and newsreel pictures of strike riots were barred.

In Saylesville only one barbed wire barricade remained to testify to the three days of battling between guardsmen and crowds around the Sayles Finishing Company.

Three other Rhode Island cities were the scene of National Guard protection today. These were Bristol, Apponaug and Pontiac where only a few companies were distributed.

Eight Providence, R. I., textile mills opened this morning and continued operations under police protection. A plant in Warren, closed last week, reopened this morning with about 75 pickets in the vicinity.

The week was starting as a final test in New England. In a number of mills, employes declared their intention to return to work, notably in communities where workers are scantily organized.

In a radio address Gorman told New England textile workers:

"We know management is weakening. What we have to do is hold tight our lines and we shall win this strike, although we do not underestimate the strength of the forces arrayed against us. Every mill not closed must be closed. I look to New England to stand fast."

Authorities were fearful of Communist moves. Police in several cities were in possession of direct evidence, revealing orders were being issued from New York and Boston to direct Communis' activities in the strike areas.

Police in Providence seized a mass of correspondence, revealing New York Communist headquarters were directing Red activities in the Rhode Island strike area. In Boston, Harry Bloomfield, a Red leader, ordered New England Communists to concentrate on mills in Maine.

Bloomfield, Communist leader, said his followers would "use force if necessary" to close Maine's mills. His organization declared its interest in the strike was due to the fact that the Communist International Textile Union has gone on strike besides the A. F. of L. Union.

Wait Result of Roosevelt Parley

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt had conferred with Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island aboard the floating White House yacht Nourmahal off Newport.

At the end of the one-hour conference, neither would make any statement. The President expressed the hope, however, that there would be no more violence and bloodshed and presidential action was expected only in the event of renewed disorder.

At Salem, trouble was feared as union leaders prepared to force closing of the Pequot Mills by heavy lines of pickets.

Lawrence reported the quietest day in two weeks, when the widely publicized walkout of wool sorters failed to materialize, and when the pickets that have been patrolling the Lawrence Duck company were not in evidence today.

Another sensitive spot in the New England map was Connecticut, where National Guardsmen were watchfully on duty in two towns as several mills reopened after the week-end holiday. Putnam was considered the danger zone and two companies of guardsmen also were assigned to Sterling.

Ely Voices Threat of Militia Rule

From Governor Ely, speaking at the Eastern States Exposition in Springfield, came a veiled intimation of use of militia in this state.

Briefly discussing the strike situation, he made known the intention of the state government to insist upon two conditions, namely:

First, the right of individuals to strike.

Secondly, the right of the individual "to work without bloodshed."

The feeling of "showdown" manifested itself in a number of New England cities, where mill owners were preparing to test the firmness of the strike lines by offering workers a chance to return to work under the protection of National Guardsmen, police and private guards.

More than 5000 national guardsmen were under arms in three New England states as both camps in the labor war faced the crisis which many observers thought was here today.

Maine Faces Big Struggle With Fear

At Ludlow, in the western part of the state, 100 citizens were sworn in for police guard duty as mills closed by the threatening approach of violence, some days ago, again swung open their gates this morning.

In sharp contrast to the riotous scenes of a week ago, more than 15,000 men and women, including strikers from many districts, turned out in a solemn tribute at Central Falls, for the funeral of Charles Gorcynski, 19-year-old youth, second victim of the strike disorders.

A procession more than a mile long marched from St. Joseph's Church to Notre Dame Cemetery to honor the slain youth, who died last week from a bullet wound received when National Guardsmen fired on a crowd which had attacked them at Moshassuck Cemetery.

The great outpouring of mourners was one of the most orderly and peaceable in the history of the state.

New Riots Start in South Despite Troop Guards

By Associated Press

Fear of disorder mounted in the nation's textile areas today, while 11,000 National Guardsmen patrolled the scenes.

Whistles blew after the week-end holiday, signaling the start of a crucial week. Southern operators were determined to open their mills. Amid a driving rain in many sections, pickets took their posts.

The strike's third week opened with scattered skirmishes in the South. A thousand pickets faced a company of National Guardsmen on a busy highway at Belmont, N. C., shouting:

"We'll Start a Revolution."

Slight skirmishes were reported from various other centers as strikers sought to consolidate their positions in the face of machine guns and bayonets.

More troops moved to the Georgia strike front, the scene of Georgia's greatest peace-time mobilization of state militiamen. Bayonets ringed mills in the Carolinas.

In New Jersey, the Passaic Valley's 20,000 dye workers, forbidden to strike by a chancery injunction, worked in an atmosphere charged with strike feeling.

Gen. Hugh Johnson was confronted by a demand for his resignation as NRA chief. The demand came yesterday from 35 labor organizations in and around Philadelphia, who branded his attack on the textile strike "false and misleading."

There is yet no word as to whether President Roosevelt is planning further steps. He conferred yesterday on the textile situation with Governor Green of Rhode Island, on the yacht Nourmahal, off Newport.

JUDGE URGES REDS OUSTER

By International News Service

Providence, Sept. 17—Judicial cognizance of the textile strike, with a demand that "Reds" be driven from Rhode Island, was made by Justice Philip Joslin of the superior court in an address to the grand jury convening in regular session today.

At the same time he urged that the rights of free speech and lawful and peaceful assembly be preserved to every individual.

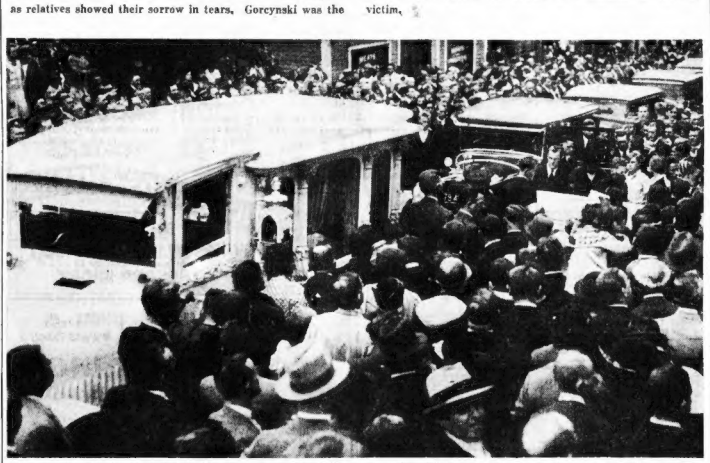
Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 17 (INS)—Socialists and Communists sought to inject themselves into the strike situation in North Carolina today, with the Socialists moving to prefer charges against Gov. J. C. B. Ehringhaus in connection with the use of troops in "peaceful mill communities."

Big Auto Parade in Charlestown

A monster auto parade of over 200 cars and trucks will be held in Charlestown this evening, in honor of Matthew L. Crehan, candidate for the Legislature from Ward 2.

* 15,000 See R. I. Strike Victim Buried With Honors *

More than 15,000 were reported as attending the funeral of Charles Gorcynski, 19-year-old Central Falls, Rhode Island, youth, on Sunday morning. The camera clicked at the grave as relatives showed their sorrow in tears. Gorcynski was the second textile strike victim. He was buried in the Notre Dame Cemetery, where the throngs joined the boy's family in their sorrow. The throng was orderly as it mourned for the riot victim.



Through the streets of Central Falls, R. I., went this white hearse, yesterday. It carried young Gorcynski, dead from bullets reputed to have come from rifles of Rhode Island guardsmen during a textile strike riot in his home town. His loved ones—his friends—friends from the textile mills, now on strike, their families and friends, followed the hearse. No larger funeral has ever been held in that town. Lights and Shadows

It can be predicted right now that October will be the most active month in the legitimate theater locally in many a season. Four first-class houses on the West Side, or west of Tremont street, will be tenanted. "Men in White," Pulitzer prize winner, will re-light the Majestic Theater. The Colonial will be busy with the Kern-Harbach operetta, "Roberta," which opens next Monday, and a successor of fine advance repute. That would be the Jack MacGowan and Ray Henderson musical play known now as "Say When," but subject to titular change. The cast of that one includes Harry Richman and a host of other box office names.

The Shubert regretfully admits that "As Thousands Cheer" will occupy its historic boards for three weeks only—two weeks to go. There was a crusade underway to keep the famous revue at least another week. But Sam H. Harris does not wish to change his booking schedule. Detroit, which has gotten a fairly good break this season athletically by reason of Boston's Mickey Cochrane and his hirelings (Tigers), will get the Irving Berlin-Moss Hart revue two weeks from tonight. It may be suspected that the World's Series week was a crowder. Attendance in this firm, refusal to prolong the visit here of "As Thousands Cheer." Mr. Harris cannot, however, be blamed. You should hear some of the salaries in his famous show! It seems that the boys and girls, when they take to the road nowadays, place a high value on their troupings.

A year in New York with a show like "As Thousands Cheer" long gets the large picture houses hungry for personal appearances. When a lady like Ethel Waters, for instance, goes a-touring, we hear she works, even with about one-third what she could get for a week in the cinema palaces. There is no sense wondering how much these offers are, vaudeville of "As Thousands Cheer." Miss Waters always commanded, many, many coronauts per week. She can counter managerial arguments with the simple truth that once there was a song called "Stormy Weather," and before that many others. I think actors should be signed for a big show under a proposition which would permit producers to have a call on their services for a lengthy road-tour. Thus, and in no other way will the Cincinnatis, St. Pauls, Kansas Cities enjoy the Boetons—get re-interested in the theater.

Here are a few more facts about "America Sings," which you were informed here a few days ago will come to the Shubert Theater October 15 with Jules Beldone in the cast: The story is about Stephen Foster, with libretto by Kay Kenney and lyrics by Arthur Swanstrom, and a score by Karl Hajos. In addition to Mr. Beldone, who will play "Ol Black Joe," a Foster retainer, Merlityre and Heath will return together to the legit . . . Alan Dinehart and Sam Shipman's play, "Alley Cat," with Mr. Dinehart in the leading role, will open tonight in New York. Another play opening in New York this week has the word "cat" in the title. It is "The Red Cat," an A. H. Woods production . . . Margaret Hewes is the producer of "Alley Cat." It was tried out in Provincetown, Mrs. Hewes, a Bostonian, by the way, will have another New York production a week from tonight when Paul Green's "Roll Sweet Chariot" bows in at the Cort Theater. Boston saw "Roll Sweet Chariot" last spring when the play was called Potter's Field."

M-G-M PLANS NEW TARZAN FILM -:- ROBERT DONAT TRIUMPHS ON SCREEN

Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan Will Head Cast for New Jungle Film

Los Angeles, Sept. 17—Not discouraged by all the other Tarzan movies, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is going right ahead with a third episode in the life of the jungle hero. And this time it's going to be a big spectacle with Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan again in the leads, and a lot of new features.

MGM, the originator of the Tarzan movies, will send a company to Africa to film the picture in authentic locale, the Upper Nile country, Murchison Falls and Kenya (the Lion country) where cameras have not yet poked their inquisitive noses. W. Van Dyke is wanted as director and this jungle epic is expected to run Tarzan all the other Tarzans.

The Benedict Arnold we learned about in our school books who went down in history as America's most noted traitor will be discounted by Universal. Arnold's direct descendant, Hurley Benedict Arnold, has sold Carle Laemmle, Jr., a story called "Benedict Arnold" in which he makes his ancestor a heroic figure and not really a bold, bad traitor. According to family annals, he was just another case of the woman did tempt me and I did eat; ya gal did the damage. If Junior can get Leslie Howard to play Arnold, he will feel that his day is complete.

Adrienne Ames' house with its swimming pool, its gardens and all its innovations will be closed soon. Miss Ames is leaving by plane next Wednesday to sail for England to make a picture for British International. She has the feminine lead in "Abdul the Damned," the picture which Jack Conway and Hunt Stromberg are directing which has kept Charles Laughton busy for the lead. Miss Ames may stay on in London and do a stage play which has been offered her. Meanwhile Bruce Cabot will have Mrs. Cabot with him.

Exciting drama surrounded the arrival of the baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Goetz from the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, the doctor was at the Good Samaritan with another expectant mother. With the two hospitals miles apart he had to act quickly, so he ordered an ambulance, took Mrs. George Porter to the Cedars of Lebanon and about four hours later she gave birth to a boy. Ten minutes later the Goetz infant, weighing six pounds and three ounces, made her appearance. The new baby is the second daughter of the Goetz family. Her father is vice-president of Twentieth Century, her grandmother, and her aunt, Mrs. David Selznick, wife of one of the vice-presidents of MGM.

Is there another Rin-Tin-Tin in the world? Is there a dog with the loyal virtues of a Newfoundland and the strength of an Alaskan husky who can be almost human? If there is such a canine, he has a job in Jack London's "Call of the Wild," opposite Fredric March. In fact, he not only has a job, but he will get a contract without option from Twentieth Century. Of course, if they were looking just for brilliance in a dog, we could offer Patsy Parsons, who is a tiny bull, or Mollie, our Irish terrier.

'Count of Monte Cristo' Packs Thrills and Adventure at RKO Keith Memorial

By JOYCE DANA

There may be nothing new under the movie sun, with the possible exception of the Damon Runyon stories. But if all the stories that found their way to the screen could be as adventurous, as exciting and as excellently presented as the "Count of Monte Cristo," the current screen attraction at the Keith Memorial, we could all sit back and cheer.

From the 1840's and from the facile pen of Alexandre Dumas the familiar story comes to the present day screen, and that it stands the test of time so admirably is due no less to the intensely thrilling and romantic yarn than it is to the presence of Robert Donat as the adventurous hero.

Donat is co-starred with Elissa Landi, and even though she emerges in the best role Hollywood has given her, it is by all odds the engaging and handsome Mr. Donat's picture. Even in the exceptionally strong cast, which boasts in addition to its starry twosome such excellent players as Louis King, Sidney Blackmer, Raymond Walburn, O. P. Heggie, William Farnum, Juliette Compton and a score of others of equal distinction, every fine performance is but second best to Mr. Donat's portrayal of Edmond Dantes who, after years in the vile prison of Chateau D'If, became the all powerful Count of Monte Christo.

The story has been given a handsome production from the time when young Dantes is wrongly accused of plotting against the crown and thrown into prison to that triumphant day when the millions he found through the dying instructions of the old Abbe Faria, he has all Paris at his feet and the three men who ruined his youth at his mercy.

Greed, corruption and villainy get their just deserts, and no chock full of suspense, romance and color is the fine old tale that Donat as the splendid adventurer, it has everything, in the way of screen entertainment. This young man, who contributed a small but excellent bit in the English film, "Henry the VIII," is the handsome cavalier to the last degree, and although this is his first Hollywood assignment, his performance and his personality are so outstanding that he looms large upon the movie horizon as the logical successor to the late and lamented Valentino.

You won't want to miss the "Count of Monte Cristo" and Mr. Donat.

VETERAN 'AMOS 'N' ANDY' AIR TEAM RETURNS TONIGHT

It isn't unusual to suppose that an enthusiastic earcupping populace from coast to coast will be alert by countless loud-speakers (WBZ) this evening, come 7 o'clock. Those inimitable and inseparable blackface boys "Amos 'n' Andy" assume their old program place again at that time. Said schedule is the original one where the famous funsters first won their laurels among listeners.

Aside from the series renewal, it is likely to be of no little interest, they are!" foreword of Bill Hay is in mind to abandon their "Fresh Air Taxicab" theme in favor of another trend. True to their conceded sense of showmanship, they do not make known their new "business" venture that is to constitute a broadcasting background. However, little doubt exists but that the plot will prove worthy of their talents, and vice-versa. Again the familiar "Here they are," foreword of Bill Hay is included. There remains but to await the stroke of 7 p. m.

"Amos"

Likewise leaving leisure behind, to take on a fall and winter fling behind the microphone, Mr. Edwin C. Hill holds forth tonight (WNAC) between 8:15 and 8:30. His spirited "Human Side of the News" highlights, as arranged for airing from his newspaper articles that appear daily in the Boston Evening American, is to occupy the same quarter hour slot on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings henceforth.

Some smartly styled satire slides through that weekly "Contented Hour" setting (WEEI) as of 9 o'clock this evening. According to advance announcement, the strains of Zobani's touching "Hearts and Flowers" composition will attend an appropriate musical atmosphere. Expect a "sinister villain twist, with the old homestead mortgage foreclosure" situations as being presented by Morgan Eastman, and his music makers.

Last of the "Summer Interlude" impressions, starring Georgie Price, takes to the four winds tonight (WNAC) between 9:30 and 10 o'clock. Moreover, the half hour base is typical of Mr. Price's variety in store. Tunes such as "Hello Bluebird," "When the Red, Red Robin," and "Ding-Dong, Bim-Bam-Boom" comprise the vocals "with which Georgie bids their air audience adieu, at least for a time.

* * *

They are switching the "Bring Them Back Alive" attraction spotlighting Frank Buck, from WBZ to WEEI waves hereabouts, but the time remains unchanged, namely 7:45 p. m.

Hearst Visits Adolph Hitler

Berlin, Sept. 17—William Randolph Hearst, American publisher, visited Adolph Hitler, chatted with the German chancellor and then flew back to Munheim.

Asked to comment on their conversation, Mr. Hearst replied:

"Visiting Hitler is like calling on the President of the United States—one doesn't talk about it for publication."

This Ear—That Air

By N. F. T.

Here and now it strikes me as decidedly in order to whip up a little lather for the soap making producers of that new "Gibson Family" network feature. Said musical comedy "mike" serial was launched on Saturday night last (WEEI) and went through the 9:30 to 10:30 hour in fine fashion.

Baritoning of Conrad Thibault never sounded better, as accompanied by Don Voorhees and his orchestra. Lois Bennett, Jack and Loretta Clemens and a big vocal chorus contributed sparkling talent also in support. Such expertly shaped radio diversion will not fail to win a way in my ever appreciative judgment. Timing of the Courtney Ryley Cooper story was splendidly planned. Likewise the commercial "plugging" was not irritating. Verily, that angle is just about the most delicate element with which program planners must deal.

Tinkling tamborines were heard wafting out of romantic old Mexico late last night. Dialing along the 760 kilocycle air lane brought in XEBC at Augua Caliente quite clearly. I didn't catch the announcer's name, but it was Don something, as might be expected. What a linguist, that chap! His gracious greeting in Spanish was promptly self-translated into English. One rarely, if ever, hears diction like he employs.

Speaking of announcers, the local Yankee network forces lose another good spokesman it seems. Fred Baangenheim hits the trail for Philly and WCAU studios. Incidentally, those WCAU studios are second only to the Radio City sound sanctums from the standpoint of architectural design and beauty.

Thanks to little Judy Schuyler, assisting at an adjacent desk here, who facetiously suggests that the Hebrew version of the popular song "Love in Bloom" might well be "Bloom in Love" . . . As for songs soloists could begin to consider that maybe this "Then I'll Be Tired of You" tune is becoming somewhat tiresome to us . . . Virginia Heath is the Hub gal who won auditions held at WNAC studios on Friday last . . . All of which means Virginia gets a one-time cross country turn with Freddie Martin and his orchestra some Sunday afternoon between October 7 and 20 . . . Jessica Dragonette exercises by roller skating on the roof of her New York apartment . . . Rudy Vallee has a letter from a rabid baseball fan who questions his right to call his orchestra "The Connecticut Yankees" because the Yankees actually play in New York . . . Arguments aplenty take place in Manhattan broadcasting circles, as to who is prattler, Leah Ree, with the Phil Harris tune troupe, or Harriet Hilliard. Ozzie Nelson orchestra songstress . . . Match this for nerve! One listener wrote to the Lands, Tex and Whitey saying he was having extreme difficulty arising each morning to hear them. Would they please call him on the phone at 8 a. m. daily? They did it once, for fun. Then they chipped in and bought him an extra sized alarm clock . . . Cuddles and Billy Mitchell, gifted little East Weymouth radio artists heard both on the Secret Agent X-9 program and the "Uncle Bob" broadcasts, are proud of their three-year-old brown eyed baby sister, Jeanette. Awarded a diamond ring at a Brockton theater recently, Jeanette was declared the winner over several hundred entries in a contest to determine the New England child most closely resembling the juvenile screen star, Shirley Temple.

B.U. Cadets Get New Uniforms

If adage, "Girls fall for a uniform," is true, then there is going to be an epidemic of romances at the Boston University college of business administration this year.

New uniforms—$6000 worth—will be issued to 600 members of the university R. O. T. C. unit, according to Lieutenant Colonel William A. Ganoe, commandant.

Captain Samuel C. Thompson and Captain Julian M. McMillan have joined the B. U. military department. They will have the titles of assistant professors in military science

Lewis E. Lawes . . . The world's largest "lodging house keeper . . . Who is warden at Sing Sing prison . . . Where he never has to advertise for boarders . . . Although most of his lodgers are unwilling . . . And fain would leave if they could.

Warden Lawes was born in a reformatory's shadow . . . At Elmira, N. Y. . . . in 1883 . . . And he used to watch the reformatory boys . . . On the lawn . . . When he was only 12 . . . And marveled that they were just like other boys . . . Even like himself . . . But somehow they had gone bad.

At 15 he tried to enlist . . . In the Spanish-American War . . . But his youth foiled him . . . And he went instead to school . . . The Elmira Free Academy . . . Working weekends for the Elmira Telegram . . . Until he was within two months of 18 . . . When he joined the army.

However, he had always admired the officers' uniforms . . . At the Elmira Reformatory . . . And he took a civil service examination . . . For reformatory or prison guard work . . . Receiving appointment after his army discharge . . . To Clinton Prison . . . At Dannemora, N. Y. . . . One for bad men . . . Who were even too bad for ordinary prisons.

He nearly turned back . . . When he arrived at the dingy mountain station . . . But there was no train until next day . . . And he decided to take a look at the prison anyway . . . And stayed for a year . . . When he was transferred

WARDEN LAWES

. . . In the spring of 1906 . . . To Auburn Prison . . . Remaining here for only six months . . . When he was shifted to Elmira Reformatory . . . Which had so fired his imagination as a boy.

Ideas which had been forming in his head developed here . . . And his chance to apply them came in 1915 . . . When a riot was staged at the New York City Reformatory . . . And he was asked to take charge . . . Restoring the reformatory morale . . . Principally by lenient and humane treatment of the inmates.

Out of a clear sky he was offered the Sing Sing warden's job . . . By Governor Al Smith . . . And entered office in January 1920 . . . Where he carried on his new ideas . . . And long since has broken the warden's duration record . . . Which was 11 months when he took charge.

Two years ago he published a fascinating book . . . "20,000 Years in Sing Sing" . . . Which was made into a talkie . . . And which placed him on the air . . . With a dramatic series . . . By the same title.

AD MEN TO HEAR U. S. SKIPPER

Management of a big ocean liner as "big business" will be discussed tomorrow by Commander Herbert Hartley, former master of the S.S. Leviathan, before members of the Advertising Club of Boston, at a luncheon to be held at the Hotel Statler. Commander Hartley will dwell on the business aspects of equipping a ship for the transoceanic trade.

Commander Hartley

Born in Oswego Falls, N. Y., Commander Hartley obtained his training for the sea on the school ship Saratoga, running from home to join. His first command was the S.S. St. Louis of the American Line, in 1917, the first ship to go into Europe in defiance of the German ultimatum.

DIVORCEE HELD ON DEATH TALE

Ellsworth, Me., Sept. 17—A comely divorcee, Mrs. Delia Hooper, 27, awaited trial on a charge of perjury as a result of testimony she gave a year ago at a murder trial here.

Star witness at the trial of Linwood Mosely, Ellsworth farmer, Mrs. Hooper testified Mosely raised and fired a gun at her during an alleged drinking party at Mosely's farm, but the charge killed Elwood Gilley, Ellsworth youth, who flung himself in front of her.

Mosely, convicted of murder by a jury verdict, was sentenced to life imprisonment.

The indictment of Mrs. Hooper, was sought by Mosely's counsel, who claimed Mrs. Hooper had retracted her testimony in a confession to them, declaring she was intoxicated at the time of the shooting and believed during the trial she was telling the truth.

President Greets 50 Boy Scouts

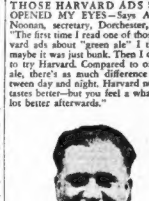
Providence, Sept. 17—Fifty Boy Scouts of Jewett City, Conn., were greeted by President Roosevelt in a brief unofficial visit to Block Island.

The President declined an official invitation by the Block Island chamber of commerce to come ashore for a visit, but when he heard the Boy Scouts had gathered on a dock, he went ashore to speak a few words to them.

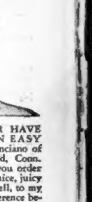
THE PEOPLE SPEAK UP ON ALE

They All Want It Fully Aged

THOSE HARVARD ADS SURE SPEND MY EYES—Says Alice L. Noonan, secretary, Dorchester, Mass. "The first time I read one of those Harvard ads about "green ale" I thought maybe it was just bunk. Then I decided to try Harvard. Compared to ordinary ale, there's as much difference as between day and night. Harvard not only tastes better—but you feel a whale of a lot better afterwards."



WHY WOULD I RATHER HAVE HARVARD? THAT'S AN EASY ONE—Exclaims Pasquale Lanciano of 107 Pleasant Street, Hartford, Conn. "I'll put it this way—would you order hamburger if you could get a nice, juicy steak for the same money? Well, to my taste, there's just as much difference between ordinary ale and Harvard Ale. Harvard has that fully aged flavor that makes a fellow know he's getting the real thing."



THOSE HARVARD PEOPLE SURE DO THINGS RIGHT—"I've known for a long time," says Abraham Bloom, tailor, Dorchester, Mass., "that Harvard Ale tastes better—and now that I've seen how Harvard is aged, I can understand why. Harvard is aged twice as long as ordinary ale. They have almost 20,000,000 glasses aging every day. You bet there's no danger of getting green ale when you ask for Harvard."

EVEN A COLOR-BLIND MAN CAN TELL THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN GREEN ALE AND HARVARD—Says Del Brissette, popular orchestra leader, Worcester, Mass. "I suppose I have introduced Harvard Ale to literally hundreds of my friends. And once they more a glass of Harvard—it's thumbs down on green, unaged ale. New Englanders just seem to be born with a taste for fully aged ale—and the only way they can be sure of getting it is to ask for Harvard."

WHERE TO GET IT—To make sure of always getting genuine fully aged Harvard Ale, look for this sign and tell 'em, "I'd rather have Harvard."

By Betty Alden

WHEN ONE LOOKS BACK after a period at sea the thoughts wander through a labyrinth of true events which seem strangely unimportant . . . we can only remember clearly the thrill in one's heart and the feeling of pride and gratitude that once again the Americans had flicked the British, at least for the day.

Try as we may to be sporting enough to wish the Endeavour the best of luck, deep in our being is the hope that Mr. Sopwith will never sail to the end of the Rainbow and take away the pot of gold.

We seldom have the opportunity of entering the world of push and pelf except in our professional capacity, so we were relieved to find on boarding the Evangeline on Friday evening at least one or two there who would keep us company. Being a fair weather sailor, we took quarters on the top deck under the bridge and having settled ourselves comfortably went downstairs to the gangway to see the crowd come aboard . . .

ABIGAIL ALDRICH

A Constant Traveller

OUR FIRST MEETING was with Miss Gertrude Sands, a member of one of Boston's grand old families when that word meant what Noah Webster intended it should . . . we reminisced a while of the jollity of another cruise when we were on the Paris together on a vagabond voyage to nowhere. Miss Sands is a constant traveller, has been in almost every country in the world, and is now contemplating an interesting sojourn into the interior of Persia . . . and she has a heart full of human kindness.

She introduced us to a good looking chap who calls the Harvard Club home when he is in Boston, which is seldom . . . John Webber, who prefers the gay life of Austria and the exhilarating sport of skiing to the hibernation of our New England winters. Mr. Webber would certainly be of interest to ambitious mothers if he would stay in these parts a while as he has enough chips to break the bank of elegance and his ship is always coming in . . .

The Sportsman sponsored the cruise to Newport and the folk came aboard early, laden with bags and baggage of all sizes and shapes . . . life assumed a friendly atmosphere as the ship's lobby filled with yachting enthusiasts and their sportswomen . . . we glimpsed the famous Aldrich family, there were six of them, Mr. and Mrs. William T. Aldrich, Miss Abigail in brown tweed steamer coat, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Aldrich (Eleanor Tweed), and George . . . also

Richard Ely Danielsons in Group

MR. AND MRS. RICHARD ELY DANIELSON (Mr. Danielson is president of Sportsman, Inc.), to whom we do not need to introduce you as they are so well known in the social and sporting world . . . Mrs. Danielson chose an English tweed suit with matching green beret for her costume . . .

General Francis Peabody, the grand old man of sport, and B. Nason Hamlin were glad-handing the voyagers and talking chances to everyone . . . there seemed to be a spirit of favoritism to the English boat among the New Englanders, we noted. There was apparently great disappointment that the Yankee was not the defender, with Skipper Adams at the helm . . .

In due course we noticed Dr. and Mrs. Charles G. Mixter, Mrs. Joseph Leiter and her buxom daughter, Nancy, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fanning Ayer, Mr. and Mrs. Max Talbot and their daughter, Kitty, with her friend, Harriet Fuller, daughter of the Gilbert E. Fullers (Mr. Fuller is president of the Raymond-Whitcomb Company who were joint sponsors of the cruise), Mr. and Mrs. Frederick C. Church, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Lindsay and their friend, Revelle Worthington, Lucy Rantoul, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. John Elliott, and a crowd of men who came stag, not to be diverted by Fair Things . . .

At nine exactly we shoved off . . . the orchestra was playing . . . the young folks danced in the salon and on the aft promenade which was gayly lighted with vari-colored bulbs. No one changed into evening things . . . sports clothes for a sports occasion.

The Arrival at Newport

THE SEA WAS A BIT CHOPPY and the boat, one of the noble fleet of the Eastern Steamship Company, rode well . . . we stowed our gear away and came back on deck to enjoy a stiff breeze under a black and threatening sky as we left the lights of Boston behind . . .

Harriet Fuller

Bets were on in the smoking room and the pool was formed . . . the results of which we did not ascertain . . . Mr. Hamlin was master of ceremonies and from the roars of loud laughter which seeped out to us in the quiet dark he was evidently in his accustomed stride . . .

By daylight on Saturday morning we dropped anchor in Newport Harbor along with a thousand other craft of all sizes and rigs . . . a mackerel sky, with the sun trying to break through, greeted the day of days . . . a fresh breeze was blowing but not the perfect racing wind that had been hoped for.

As we stood on the forward deck watching the various craft drift into position with a number of our fellow passengers, we suddenly heard the booming of cannon on land and sea . . . the President was coming, and soon we saw the handsome white Nourmahal (Pride of the Harem) with Franklin D. Roosevelt aboard, duenna-d by a grey-hound cruiser, within our range of vision. Twenty-one salutes were fired as she steamed past the greyhounds of the American navy, and before very long (we were watching her closely with binoculars) our President's handsome head was seen over the guard rails at the stern, with his son, James, leaning against a mast and a group of friends all around.

At 10 o'clock there was a stirring among the boats again and the President, on the Astor yacht, was the first to weigh anchor and to sail out to the racing grounds with the fleet, which was to form a V-fan to protect the course. We saw the Minneapolis flying the flag of the Secretary of the Navy as she steamed out into position and many well-known yachtsmen were on their boats for this important event. (Continued tomorrow — what happened at Newport.)

Given in Marriage

By Adele Garrison

Madge, much against her will, agrees with Lillian's suggestion that Mother Graham be informed of impending danger from the scheming Avis Arlen.

CHAPTER 142

I FELT AS IF I were a fish floundering in a seine as Lillian asked me whether I saw any other way out of the dilemma facing us than to tell my mother-in-law just what Avis Arlen was trying to do.

Dicky's mother has all of the sterling virtues, and few faults of character. Yet because of her capriciousness and sensitiveness to slights, it is worth the Croix de Guerre—or so her son says—to broach any plan to her containing anything calculated to offend her sense of dignity.

Yet Lillian was telling me—and rightly—I knew—that I first must tell my mother-in-law that Dicky and I would be compelled to absent ourselves from this last dinner before the wedding of Mother Graham's oldest granddaughter, Mary Harrison, and then, in explanation of what she would consider a deadly insult to her daughter and son-in-law, the Braithwaites, most acquaint the feeble old woman with the menace to Mary's peace of mind which I felt Avis Arlen was bringing into the house.

But there was no other way out. I realize now that I had known it from the moment I had told Avis Arlen someone would meet her at Patchogue; and as it is never my way to dodge or to put off an evil moment, I threw up my head and answered Lillian

PLANS TO MEET AVIS

"No, there is no other way out, but I need your help, Harry, will you go up to his room, where Dicky is administering the high justice, the middle and the low to Junior and Roderick?"

"Good Godfrey! You don't mean he's tanning 'em?" Mr. Underwood exclaimed in lovely horror.

"No indeed!" I told him laughing, "just reasoning with them for the good of their souls. He'll tell you all about it. I haven't time. Tell him I want to see him in my room in five minutes if he can manage it. Also, will you have Jim bring Dicky's car around to the side door?"

"Anything else?" The big man lounged to his feet.

"Not now." I told him, and he moved swiftly to the door.

"What's my job?" Lillian asked with a little laugh, but I sensed the comradely readiness to help that lay beneath her lightness.

A DIFFICULT TASK

"The hardest one," I told her. "Try to get Mother Graham in as pleasant a mood as possible in the next five minutes, and stand by afterward when Dicky and I shall have gone."

"Police!" Also the state constabulary!" Lillian raised her hands in burlesqued appeal to the ceiling. "I'll tell the world you've given me a job."

Quickly I retailed Avis Arlen's reiteration that she must see Noel before his wedding, in order to "explain something very special, very precious, very sacred," between herself and Noel.

Lillian clenched her fists and shook them in the air.

"I haven't words," she said loudly, "but I'm with you on what I guess is your platform. She shall not pass. She shall never reach the Marne."

"Thank you," I said. "That's what I've resolved. I'm going to enlist the youngsters in the holy war."

"They'll be your best bet," Lillian said as we parted

I found Marion, Carolyn, Ronald and Bob in the little study, and their bright, alert faces were filled with curiosity and excitement as I sat down opposite them.

"Avis Arlen is plotting some mischief to Mary, I am sure," I began. "I don't mean physical injury, but—well, here's what she has told me."

I retailed swiftly the girl's attempts to have Noel meet her, and what she had said about wishing to see him. They heard me in respectful silence, but I had no sooner finished, than they exploded into picturesque expletives which characterized Avis as the more unpleasant varieties of animal and insect life.

"There isn't any spray poisonous enough even to affect her," Marion said viciously, at last, "but I'm ready to go to the electric chair, if it's necessary to bump her off. How about you, Carol?"

"I'm with you," Carolyn said, with a vicious little snap of her teeth.

"We'll all go from the same gallbitter," the boys promised gallantly.

"I don't think you'll have to go to such lengths," I told them laughing. "But I do want a pledge from each of you."

"Name it," they chorused.

"I want you to see to it that Avis does not see Noel alone for one minute before that wedding—or after it," I told them solemnly. "Can you do that?"

Touches of Fur Show Great Variety

Left above, an oxford gray diagonal tweed plastron and turn down shoulder collar of caracul with trig belt and buckle.

Center, a subtly smart black tweed coat with a rever and standing collar of Persian.

The coat sketched right above is a smooth black cloth model in a fabric which has a diagonal weave. The high collar and the purse-muff are silver fox.

By PRUNELLA WOOD

FUR trimmed coats this year have a lot of new tricks up (and on) their sleeves, with most of them suggesting the subtle, dressmaker touch rather than the dramatic, zero-weather top-coat idea. Many of them look like frocks of the coat type, so sleek and restrained they are, especially when they are belted and buckled handsomely.

IT is now easy to find a soft tweed which has been cut to crisp smartness instead of toward the sports ideal. Such a coat is a practical joy, for it will behave well in any weather, wrinkle but slowly and make the contrast between it and a dress-up garment very marked indeed. Unless a woman has a whole outfit of fur coats for all occasions and weathers, she really needs a sturdy cloth coat to take the strain of every day wear off what furs she has

MODELS that employ a minimum of fur about the neck and cuff lines are showing Persian, krimmer, kolinsky, fitch, squirrel and beaver this year The same furs are also used handsomely in plastrons, solid sleeves, yokes and capelets for coats that are half-fur instead of merely fur trimmed. Lots of silver fox is used in stunning high collars on black and gray coats, and the cross fox is used for the same designs in brown and green.

Diagonal weaves, crepes of bark roughness and tweeds that look like fine homespun are all popular fabrics for the new fur trimmed cloth coats

Rub Lotion in With Upward Strokes

By Juliet Shelby

OF ALL THE cosmetics that are offered us in confusing profusion, there are not any so much beloved by women as those which perform a slight miracle! If they promise to endow us with monkey glands, or do the operative work needed in half the time it usually takes, we become victims. And, as science is taking such tremendous strides in beauty culture, we are always hoping for the introduction of another miracle—or of the first miracle!

But it is true that some cosmetics are much more efficacious than others And when you stop to think how easily a very plain woman is made into a creature of glamour and beauty, it is no wonder that our eagerness is so acute

Take for instance the hand beautifier I have in mind. I have tried many hand creams and lotions, but like this one especially well because it so instantly restores smoothness to the skin. A little massaged into a thoroughly dry skin, smooths it, freshens it and whitens it

If your hands get red when you are excited, or nervous, or in a hurry, as mine are apt to do, try using this cream to recapture the natural coloring. Sit for a few minutes holding your hands in the air, resting on your elbows. This helps the blood to leave them and whitens them considerably

Or if you are a person who is always intending to use a hand cream or lotion daily, but doesn't and you need something to banish that work-a-day look of your hands, then by all means keep a jar of this beautifier around Rub it in well with upward strokes finger between thumb and index finger along the sides while still from the fingertips, pinching the nails You will be pleasantly surprised with the improvement it makes

Hands can so easily be the discordant note of your grooming. Don't let that happen! It robs you of poise and ease.

You may learn the name of the hand beautifier and where it is sold by phoning Juliet Shelby Liberty 4000. If you prefer writing for this information, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope along with your inquiry to Miss Shelby, Boston Evening American, Boston.

Question: What is the best way of using a pumice stone for the removal of superfluous hair?

R. D., Salem.

Answer The best way is to keep your pumice stone in your soap dish on the bath tub. Before taking your bath moisten the pumice stone and rub it up and down or in a rotary movement where you wish the hair removed. Keep the skin and the stone moistened enough so that it will not burn or irritate the skin. Do this as often as is necessary.

If you are conscientious about using it every time you see the superfluous hair growing in again, you will find that it will not become much of a chore to keep the superfluous hair in check

Dark Eye Circles

Question: Under my eyes I have dark circles and a skin condition that I can call by no other name than "goose-flesh." Please give me your advice.

W. M., Dorchester.

Answer The circles under your eyes may be caused by lack of sleep or poor circulation. Try to get at least nine hours sleep every night. The goose-flesh must be your white heads. I would not advise you to try to do anything to them yourself.

Either consult your physician and have him remove them for you with a sterile needle, or go to a competent beauty parlor and have an experienced operator remove them for you

4-4 Trump Hand Required Hybrid Style of Play by N. E. Expert

By Josephine Culbertson

The play of a 4-4 trump suit is closely allied with the play of both trump and notrump contracts. It is often necessary to leave the adverse trumps at large in order to reserve one's own trumps for holding the adverse long suit at bay while establishing one's own long suit. Then when the necessary tricks of a contract are established the trumps are drawn.

While some hands in which the trump suit is divided 5-3 or more unevenly respond to this description, there are basic reasons why a greater percentage of the 4-4 trump hands require a hybrid style of play. The 4-4 trump holding often gives choice as to which hand is to be left long enough to exhaust the adverse trumps, and the choice often depends upon the development of the defense as play progresses.

South, Dealer
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the spade nine. South's showing of a two-suiter had warned him to anticipate a cross-ruff.

South won the opening lead with the Jack. He immediately led a small club and East won the Queen with the Ace.

East returned the jack of hearts. West won with the ace and led a second round of the suit, knocking out South's stopper.

Mr. Williams had expected that on regaining the lead the opponents would continue trumps, as West's opening lead had apparently committed the opponents to that line of defense. But East had abandoned this line and West, by returning East's heart lead, had consumed in the switch of plan. The declarer concluded that East had reason for wishing to force the trumps in the South hand via the heart suit, from which it was inferred that East probably held the remaining trumps.

A bad trump break would kill any campaign looking toward the complete establishment of the diamonds or the clubs. South felt compelled to verify his suspicion about the trump break before committing himself in either minor suit. He therefore laid down the spade ace, on which West discarded a heart.

Declarer now embarked on a delicate but closely calculated campaign. He led a diamond and won the finesse of the Queen, then led the last heart from Dummy and ruffed with the spade three. Hig now cashed the club King, North discarding a diamond. Then North was put in with the diamond Ace to lead a third round of the suit, which South ruffed with the spade Queen.

The idea of all this play was that Declarer had to increase his trump winners to make up for the impossibility of establishing extra high or long card tricks in the minor suits. His final hope was that if East could be forced in the lead through the club suit at trick eleven he would be forced to lead back into Dummy's major trump tenace At trick eleven South therefore led the club ten, and this hoped-for denouement came to pass as a reward for his excellent handling of the hand.

Apple Desserts Unusual Touch

By Martha Lee

From Martha Lee's Monday Morning Broadcast Over WAAB

IN CASE a Chinook Indian ever comes up to you and starts telling you "Muckamuck," etc., you know he's only trying to tell you in his own way that "an apple a day keeps the doctor away."

Of course, if he were a modern Indian who read the subway, trolley and newspaper ads, he would probably add that prune, tomato, pineapple and orange juice also keep the medicos away.

But today we are giving credit to apples only. Apples really are grand—yet we have never found them as diverting as doctors.

DUTCH APPLE GRAHAM CRACKER CAKE

3 tablespoons butter
½ cup sugar
2 egg yolks
½ cup milk
20 graham crackers, crushed fine
2½ teaspoons baking powder
2 egg whites, stiffly beaten
½ teaspoon salt
¾ teaspoon vanilla
3 tablespoons melted butter
3 apples, sliced
3 teaspoons sugar
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Cream butter and sugar and add egg yolks. Combine graham cracker crumbs with baking powder, and add alternately with milk to first mixture. Add egg whites, salt and vanilla. Pour into greased 8-inch layer pan and cover with melted butter. Arrange sliced apples on top of mixture and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Bake at 350 deg. F. until apples are tender—about 45 minutes.

GRAHAM APPLE PUDDING

4 cups chopped apples
1-3 cup sugar
½ teaspoon nutmeg
45 graham crackers, crushed fine
¼ cup butter

Put layer of chopped apples in bottom of buttered baking dish. Sprinkle with sugar and dash of nutmeg. Add generous layer of graham cracker crumbs Dot with butter and repeat until all ingredients are used Top with graham cracker crumbs and butter and bake in slow oven (325 deg. F.) until apples are tender, approximately one hour

Serve with or without whipped cream or vanilla sauce Serves 6 to 8.

IF YOUR BREATH HAS A SMELL YOU CAN'T FEEL WELL

When we eat too much, our food decays in our bowels. Our breath smells of decay coming out of our mouth and rank, bad breath. We feel the poison of the decay all over our body. It makes us sloomy, grouchy and no good for anything.

What makes the food decay in the bowels? Well, when we eat too much, our bowels can't digest it. What is the big cause of the most awful gastric upset in the body? Unless 2 pints of it are flowing from our liver into our bowels every day, our movements get hard and constipated. ¾ of our food decays in our 28 feet of bowels. This decay sends poison all over our body every 24 minutes.

When our friends avoid our bad breath (but we don't) and we feel like a whipped tomcat, don't use a mouthwash or laxatives. Get at the cause. Take Carter's Little Liver Pills which gently start the flow of your bile juice. But if "something better" is offered you, don't buy it, for it may be a calomel (mercury) pill, which loosens teeth, gripes and scalds the portion by many people. YOUTH, 18, SOUGHT AS NO. END SLAYER

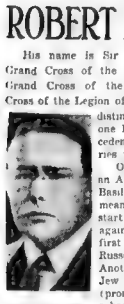
ROBERT E. ROGERS



Robert E. Rogers

His name is Sir Basil Zaharoff, Knight Grand Cross of the British Empire, Knight Grand Cross of the Bath, Chevalier Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor—and a few other distinctions of that sort. No one knows his origin or antecedents. There are three stories told about him.

One story says that he is an Anatolian Greek. The name Basil is from Basilcos, which means "king." After a false start in business he began again in Athens and found his first big opportunity in the Russo-Turkish war of 1877. Another story is that he is a Jew of Odessa, that Zaharoff (pronounced as if the H were the penult, like most Russian names) is a russification of the Hebrew Zachariah.

The third and most interesting story is that he is a former bishop of the Orthodox church in Russia, that he embezzled a great jewel of the church to present to the Czarina, had to leave Russia and made his start in the inner diplomatic circles of Europe.

That is the way that most interesting new book "Zaharoff" begins, published by a Boston firm, Lothrop, Lee and Shepherd and written by one Guiles Davenport, who was educated here and abroad, has been a foreign correspondent ever since he began his career in Mexico in 1916, covered the World War, and has been in Europe ever since, collecting material on "the Zaharoff System," as he calls it, until he had to flee the continent because he knew so much.

Briefly the book is the biography of the mysterious, powerful man who is supposed to be the mainspring of all the international munitions activities which are being investigated in Washington, activities of which America knows little and suspects less and in which Bethlehem Steel and the Du Ponts play only a minor part.

The Zaharoff System is a ring of munitions manufacturers—the Vickers in England, the Krupps in Germany, and the Schneider-Creusot in France—whose business it is to supply the world with arms and, incidentally, to see that there are sufficient wars to make profits on those arms. They have taken Bernard Shaw's mystical "Creed of the Armorer" and debauched it.

Shaw's munitions millionaire, Undershaft, believed it was the armorer's business to sell arms to all impartially, so that the good cause might be on an equality with the evil, "that the scale may teeter to Heaven the victory." But Shaw in his innocence probably did not contemplate a situation in which a country's soldiers should be shot down by munitions sold by manufacturers in his own country, in wars engineered by financial and political powers who were heavy stockholders in the munitions business.

The number of recent books on the subject, the present investigation, the strong general interest, makes this new biography particularly timely and important at this time.

In addition to the fascinating chapter speculating on the three possibilities of the man's origin, there is the story how Zaharoff, already wealthy and influential in the Vickers-Nordenfelt arms company, tried to gyp Hiram Maxim out of his commanding position as inventor of the best machine gun to date, by means of methods more honored in the breach than in the observance. Eventually, he had to go partners with him.

There is the story how he outwitted the German propaganda in Greece, during the World War, and brought Greece in on the side of the Allies. How he outwitted Mussolini in the Corfu incident by putting his millions at the disposal of the Greek government, and how, in his old age, he dreamed of reconstituting the Roman empire of the ancients, so checkmating Italian aspirations. These, by the way, are the chapters which would seem to show that the man of mystery really is a Greek, not a Jew or Russian.

Anyway, it is an interesting record, including the story of the secret visit to President Hoover, and the story which insists that the man has two doubles whom he employs to appear conspicuously in London or Paris or Monte Carlo while he is really working somewhere else. He is a very old man now, living in retirement, but, apparently, the Zaharoff System is still extant and important. It controls French statesmanship; it put Hitler in power in Germany, and our American munitions organizations seem not entirely free from his influence.

And lastly, among his services to society, it must not be forgotten that Zaharoff has probably served as model for more arch-villains in international mystery stories, such as those written by Beede and Oppenheim, than any other person. The sinister Levantine millionaire who aims to organize all Europe for purposes of peace or war, of Fascism or Communism, is, of course, Zaharoff. Sometimes he is found lying dead on the library rug, but not often. The real Zaharoff has escaped so far.

GIRL SUFFERS BONE BREAK 13TH TIME

For the 13th time in four years, little Betty Mark, who has seen a lot of City Hospital during the seven years of life, was back there again today, with another bone break.

According to doctors the child's bones are unusually brittle and lack the proper amount of calcium.

Last of Betty's tragic falls occurred when she tripped over a kiddie car in the kitchen of her home at Emmelia terrace, Jamaica Plain, and fractured a leg.

TO LEAVE IN MONTH

But there is one consolation for Betty today. Physicians say that she will be able to leave the hospital in about a month, and so unless another accident happens, Betty will be able to spend a Christmas at home for the first time in four years.

Nurses and attendants at the hospital have paid glowing praise to Betty's bravery and cheerfulness in the face of repeated suffering. They say she never complains over any of the necessary treatments.

In fact, during those happy intervals in the last four years when she has been home, Betty has busied herself by bandaging her dolls in splints.

HURT IN FALLS

All of her breaks have been from falls, either off a chair or tripping over some object, and never have been from any great height.

One time it was tripping over a gas pipe, then just a plain fall to the ground while she was pushing her baby carriage, but all brought fractured or broken bones for Betty.

At the occasion of one of her ill-fated falls in April, 1933, Betty cried out to her mother:

"Oh, mama, come quick, I've broken my leg again."

When Betty was in the hospital on Christmas Day, 1932, for the third consecutive time, she gained the sympathy of thousands by her prayers:

"Please, Santa, bring me legs that won't break any more."

FLEET WARS ON ALIEN RUNNERS

Under orders from Captain Cecil M. Gabbett, commander of the Boston division, a fleet of coast guard vessels opened a drive today to stop smuggling of Chinese into this country.

The fleet ordered to stop the influx of "coolies" in Atlantic coastal ports is comprised of 17 picket boats, three cutters and two patrol vessels, all under command of Lieutenant Robert C. Jewell of the cutter Kickapoo.

The vessels will patrol off the coast of Maine, the landing place of illegal liquors previous to the drive instituted several weeks ago by the coast guard.

Several suspicious-looking vessels were stopped and searched, it was learned here, but whether aliens were found was not disclosed.

The drive was ordered after it was reported the syndicate which was unable to find the illegal liquors due to the activity of the fleet, converted their boats into smuggling ships for aliens.

Essex Camp Burns

Essex, Sept. 17—Gasoline used by two Salem youths in a range caused a fire that destroyed a Lufkin road camp and threatened six nearby buildings.

"I Wish I Had Legs Like My Dolly's"

SULLIVAN GETS HIS JOB BACK

John F. Sullivan, discharged by Mayor Mansfield after 19 years as superintendent of ferries in East Boston, was ordered reinstated today in a decision by Judge Roscoe Walsworth, in which he stated that "the discharge was made without proper cause, and was not in good faith against the petitioner, Sullivan."

Sullivan, for years a political figure in East Boston was a staunch supporter of District Attorney Foley against Mansfield in the mayoralty campaign. When Mansfield took over the job as mayor he fired Sullivan, declaring that the merging of the new tunnel with the ferry system did not any longer require a superintendent.

The decision said:

"The discharge was made without proper cause and was not in good faith against the petitioner and I hereby order that the said decision be reversed and the petitioner named, Mr. Sullivan, be reinstated in his position or office from which he was so discharged and that he be reinstated without loss of pay."

Body of Worker Is Found in Charles

The body of an unidentified man, about 30 years old, was found floating in the Charles River, about ten feet from the Cambridge shore today.

Police say the body had been in the water five days.

A workman's tag found in the man's clothes was the only clue to any identification. Police believe he may have been employed by an automobile company.

Baby Slumbers as Police Hike

Haverhill, Sept. 17—Fond fathers who have to walk their babies to sleep should take a tip today from Patrolmen James Keaney and Timothy Mahoney.

Discovering a two-year-old baby left all alone in a house on Green street, the patrolmen succeeded in bringing the little girl two miles to headquarters without once awakening her.

The child had been left in the house under the care of a young schoolgirl while the parents went to the movies, but the amateur nursemaid had tired of her job and left the infant sleeping in the house alone.

CONSTITUTION IS HONORED

The anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, 147 years ago, was celebrated today in a special program, sponsored by the Women's National Republican Club.

Celebration by the club was made possible through a gift of $5000 to that organization last spring by Mrs. Chester Alwyn Braman, of New York.

At the Constitutional Convention held in Philadelphia in 1787, a great majority of the Massachusetts delegates at first opposed adoption of the Constitution until swayed by Governor John Hancock to accept it.

WOMEN DEMAND TAX OF $20

With the adoption of "Mansfield Must Go" as their slogan, Massachusetts Real Estate Owners' Association members were today determined not to pay a tax rate of more than $20 for 1935.

Three thousand members of the association marched to the Parkman bandstand yesterday to hold a meeting without permission of Mayor Mansfield. Upon arrival they found a concert by ERA musicians in progress.

Some 5000 people had gathered for the meeting. What might have been a "free-for-all" was prevented by police of the Milk street station when they suggested that the crowd move on to the Mall.

Father Climbs Into Well to Save Small Son

Although two-year-old William Warrell, of Mayflower avenue, Nantasket, was fully recovered today from the effects of his 30-foot fall into a well, his father was nursing a pair of very sore hands.

The boy was chasing a kitten in the back yard of Lieutenant George Samonski, of Hobart street, Hingham, where he was visiting with his parents, when he kicked aside a board over a well and fell in.

His father rushed to the scene and let himself down into the well by means of jagged stones protruding from its side. Grabbing his son by the hair, he lifted him under one arm and slowly crawled up the side again.

He collapsed as he reached the top, just after he had handed his son to Lieutenant Samonski.

Killed by Auto

Adams, Sept. 17 (AP)—Alfred Jarvis, 64, of Adams and Savoy, was instantly killed here when struck by an automobile.

WOUNDS FATAL TO BOY SHOT IN CARD GAME

After a raid early today failed to find an 18-year-old North End youth who shot and killed Ernest Di Stasio, 14, of Tileston street police today were scouring East Boston haunts for the murder suspect.

The shooting occurred, police said, when the youth became angered because Di Stasio and several other boys were playing cards in a Unity street doorway.

FLEE DEATH SCENE

Infuriated because the youngsters laughed at his demands that they move on, the slayer ran to his nearby home and returned with two revolvers.

The single shot which was fired, entered the right side of the D. Stasio boy's head from above and embedded itself in the lower left-hand side.

Neighbors, summoned by the shot, said that the killer and the other boys fled and that they found only the dying Di Stasio on the sidewalk.

Rushed to the Haymarket Relief Hospital, young Di Stasio died two hours after the shooting. He did not regain consciousness and was unidentified until his brother, Marino Di Stasio, attracted by the crowd on Unity street, overheard some one say that a boy named Ernest had been shot. He went to the hospital and recognizing the boy, ran home and told his father.

FOUR GIVE NAME

A wholesale roundup of boys and girls in the North End was ordered by Captain John Mullen of the North street station when no one could be found at the scene who could explain the killing.

After a number of youngsters had been grilled, four witnesses were found who disclosed the name of the killer to police. Police refused to reveal the names of the witnesses.

Woman, Man Held After Rum Raids

Mrs. Etels Sullivan, of Gold street, South Boston, and Nicola DiLucia, clerk in a drug store on Broadway, South Boston, faced district court today, for alleged violations of the liquor laws.

Police from the South Boston station said they found Mrs. Sullivan pouring a half gallon of liquor into pint bottles in her home. Police claim DiLucia sold them a pint of alcohol in violation of the amended Sunday laws.

Watchman School Planned by State

With the endorsement of fire police, and insurance officials, the Massachusetts Department of Education will open a training school for watchmen in Gardner Auditorium, State House, October 8. Watchmen will be taught the proper way to protect property. Those who attend will receive certificates.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17—Diary: Early abroad and saw George Ackley, healthier than I ever saw him. And loitering along the shop windows espied Joe Laurie, Jr., and his whackin' big cheroot. Also Morris Gest. So back to my quarters and breakfasting on the first sausage of the autumn.

Dilly-dallying until Genevieve Cooper and her niece, Margaret, from Denver came, and all driving to the Murray Hill. Then off to a gathering and talked to the Dudley Field Malones, Lois Long and two very British chappies. Also Estelle Taylor, looking very youngish.

To dinner with my wife and Lucy Virginia Long at the Port Arthur, in Chinatown, and watched the hub-bub in the narrow streets from a balcony. Afterward through the tense sidewalk jostle of Mulberry. Later to Conde Nast's supper party to Grace Moore, the singer.

In the glower of Brooklyn Bridge is a narrow slit known as Cat Alley, possessing a feline colony unsurpassed for variety. Bums in the area attract them by scattering left-overs of their Mulligan stews. The other evening I saw the youngest inhabitant. He was jet black and his eyes, not long open to the world, had the milky blueness of extreme infancy. He looked as innocent as a reporter just down from Columbia School of Journalism. Yet a marvellous tiny ball of instinct. A lady came by in a coupe, stopped, looked about furtively, picked up the kitten and shot away. One had a happy feeling a stray of Cat Alley had found a fine home.

In these down-town by-ways, too, one sees the last of the valiant truck horses. At night they are hosed off and bedded in rickety barns. During the day they strain willingly against heavy weight. There are brutes who swear at them and jag their mouths. But mostly they are kind. There is not a more appealing sight than a carter making a fuss over his horse. It is a rough, clumsy and gallant affection, but bespeaks a rare devotion.

Probably the greatest stage flop the Rialto ever witnessed was in a revue several years ago that imported with a great clashing of cymbals the Spanish dancer Argentina. She turned out to be an obese, heavy-footed Senorita whose fandangoes suggested the Flatiron building grown suddenly kittenish. So third-rate seemed her exhibit scores walked out and those who remained are reputed to have pitched pennies to the lady. Two days later she sailed away in high carriage to what New York supposed oblivion. Yet Paul Yawitz reports she is now the biggest attraction of years in a continental music hall.

They were talking of optimists. My choice was a wraith I saw faintly outlined in a thick fog one morning near the entrance to the Savoy on the Strand. He was still there on the same fog when I got back at 6 p. m., making a tin monkey run up and down a piece of twine. Any time things don't go well, I can perk up, thinking of that fellow trying to sell tin monkeys in a thick fog.

Life would not be the same in New York without occasional yoicks of the leather-lunged sellers of extra editions. They never arrive normally; they loom, curdling the blood with deliciously horrible yowlings, suggesting the lonely wolf in the picture book. No matter the time, day or night, I'm a customer.

WOMAN SCORES HITLER RULE

How Hitler has deprived the German women of liberty and participation in governmental affairs was told by Fraulein Dorothea Heinrich at the closing session of the National Business Conference at Babson Institute, Wellesley.

Fraulein Heinrich, formerly secretary of the Women's Trade Union in Germany, made a daring escape to this country after she had been sentenced to a labor camp by the Hitler government.

If we suppose for the moment that a Central Bank of Issue becomes a fact through action of Congress—without trying to guess in detail its duties and responsibilities—it is easy to see why some interests are disturbed. Although we have moved onto a managed currency basis in this country the step has been not a roaring success for the simple reason that bank credit in the form of checks, drafts and discounted bills form by far the largest medium of exchange. More government control over these latter is needed to make management nearly a success. Federal direction of credit expansion and contraction is seen as the needed instrument for control ...

The motor industry continues to be a cheerful source of good news. From the weekly report edited by B. H. Cram we learn today that only a slight decline in retail sales of new passenger cars is to be noted. The strengthening of sales which developed in late August has not only been maintained but is so encouraging that dealers now feel that their fears of a pronounced drop in the wake of receding general business activity were needless. Production of course will show a declining tendency from now to the end of the year in reflection of dealer desire to clear stocks in preparation for 1935 models.

SHARE PRICES RECOVER NEAR THE FINISH

New York, Sept. 17—The stock market staged a quiet recovery after reacting 1 to 2 points in the forenoon trading today. Metals were prominent all day. Sales totaled 2,100,000 shares, rising 3 points. U. S. Industrial Alcohol was heavy, but declines of around 1 to 2 were virtually cancelled by U. S. Steel preferred, Westinghouse and American Telephone. The late tone was slightly firmer.

STEEL STOCKHOLDERS

Despite the recent pronounced decline in the price of U. S. Steel shares, the corporation announced that at the beginning of this month there were 191,773 holders of its common stock, an increase of 1,414 from June 1. This is the second largest number of steel company stockholders ever recorded, the peaking having been 192,384 in March of 1933.

Some skilled students of economic affairs said the increase is based upon belief that a good deal of business must be in store, as otherwise the last one hundred dollars and fifty dollars that do not renew their interest.

Analysts pointed out that the present level of stock prices is not low now, in comparison with that prevailing during the 1926 to 1929 era, on the basis of probable earning power, in a period of normality such as they look for in coming years. It was said the existing stock is high if earnings are to remain at the present level, or are to decline.

Proponents of all or part of the New Deal point to the huge expenditures of federal funds as a mandate, and a vindication of the soundness of the underlying principles of some of the theories. Those opposed contend financial operation there was a concealed deficit of about $250,000,000 for the year, as now understood by the average man.

STEEL GAINS NOTED

Plans for reopening many textile mills in the South and reports of improvement in steel buying and seasonal gains in carloadings cheered the financial district somewhat, but the news was generally

The magazine "Steel," estimating that operations of the industry had risen 2½ points last week to 28 per cent capacity, reported sentiment in steel and iron quarters had brightened perceptibly.

Consumption of steel, the magazine declared, has been exceeding production lately. As a result, convincing steelmakers new requirements cannot be deferred much longer.

Steel producers, however, were said to be facing increasing pressure from buyers for lower prices.

Rail reports were watched for evidence that the seasonal gain in trends were going. Loadings of the Santa Fe last week, it was reported, made a fully seasonal gain, increasing to about 25,000 cars compared with 25,373 the preceding week, which included Labor Day, and with 25,321 in the like 1933 week.

Revelation that the Treasury was still $720,000,000 short of completing its $1,250,000,000 Fourth Liberty Bond refunding operation was accepted in banking quarters as confirmation of reports of a week's decline in the government bond market has slowed down the recession program.

Youngstown Steel Operations Gain

District steel operations have risen two points to 28 per cent with Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. and Republic Steel Corp. boosting operations slightly. A blast furnace has been blown in by Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and the week's output of ingots for a number of fire openhearths. Republic advances from seven to eight.

Carnegie will continue with six openhearths and its Hesperus operating about as selling was checked in the second hour. Prices held around the lows. Sales were 379,000 shares.

12-1—Rails were weak in third hour dealings. U. S. Smelting rallied more than four, but metals as a group, were lower. Utilities were heavy and losses of from one to two points recorded in leading chemicals. Trading was dull, with sales amounting to 470,000 shares.

1-2—Shares recovered fractionally in the fourth hour. U. S. Smelting, a strong spot, was up 3 points. A Reid Minors firmed Molybdenum was up 5. Trading was quiet, with sales approximating 3,000,000 shares.

2-3—Tendency toward firming was displayed by shares in last hour dealings. Leading issues put loss to fraction or less. Closing tone was slightly irregular. Sales were estimated at 600,000 shares.

Stock Market Timetable

10-11—Selling in U. S. Steel carried prices lower in the first hour. Both steel issues touched new lows. Rails and chemicals showed weakness. Trading was moderately active with sales running 180,000 shares.

11-12—Trading volume decreased as selling was checked in the second hour. Prices held around the lows. Sales were 379,000 shares.

By AUSTEN LAKE

THE STIRRING PART OF THE MARINE scene off Newport is not the dignified drifting of the Cup Yachts with their lofty poles and swelling sails. It is the breakup of the spectator fleet after the races, the scurrying scramble of the little bug-boats for port and a favorable anchorage.

Austen Lake

Here they come, aypping and amoaning, like a pack of alley hounds after a pussy cat. Some are flea-bitten sea-mavericks loaded with folk in ragtag sailor dress, some big bellied, clumsy and self-important, some slinky and rakish with people in gay garden colors.

So close packed they are as they shuttle and weave, that it is almost possible to hop-skip to shore, deck to deck, snatching a handful of canapes and fashionable food on the society boats and a swig of old Panther juice from the rowdy craft.

Not one in 1000 of the sofa-tars know or cares about the nautical dodges of the Cup boats. It's a lavish, floating picnic in which the marine rabble mixes with the yachting nobility, taking their refreshment variously from the rim of tall, crystal glasses or from the neck of flat, black bottles.

BY NIGHT THE HARBOR IS A TWINKLE with fairy lights against the velvet gloom. The port reds and starboard greens, the blue bulbs at the masthead when the owner is aboard, the white riding bug-eyes, the pale, moving searchlight fingers, the yellow glow from ports and cabin windows and the incandescent reflection on the waters.

The big power yachts, Morgan's Corsair, H. I. Manville's Hi-Esmaro, Alfred Du Pont's Nenemnasha, George Baker's Viking, Anthony Drexel's Queen of Scots, Vincent Astor's Nourmahal and a score of other million-dollar, ocean-going hotels have no room to lie among the harbor squabs, and are anchored west of Goat Island, where is the navy's torpedo station and the haven of aristocracy.

There is the tantalizing sound of popping corks, high-pitched female laughter and the wind-filtered strains of orchestra and vocal music.

But this morning, till noon, there was no movement, no stir of life in the flotilla. The floating population was abed with one grand, pulsating headache, gathering strength for the other headaches that are still to come.

LAWSON LITTLE, WHO ADDED THE U. S. amateur golf mace to his stock of sideboard silverware at Brookline last Saturday, has the burly build of a college fullback, massive through the chest, thick waisted. But, like Babe Ruth, his body is set on slender, flamingo stilts.

Little lacks the warmth of manner that appeals to crowd fancy. He plays with the grim earnestness of a piece-work plumber, wearing a heavy, brooding frown that comes from concentration.

If he were a sensitive, crowd conscious type, he probably would have been disconcerted by the partisan attitude of the galleries last week, which gloated on the smart shots of his opponents and greeted most of his best efforts with cold silence.

IN BOSTON TODAY THERE ARE THIRTY-ODD race bookmakers who ply an illicit but quasi-profitable trade. Before horse racing was legalized in Rhode Island and New Hampshire, there were five hardy bookies in this city who scraped up a comfortable living.

Competition is such now that most of the bookmakers employ a flock of "runners" who hang around the business and industrial centers, affable and familiar with their trade. They don't solicit but they stay handy in case you know about a certain horse.

But you won't get the full value for sensational long shots. Some books limit long shot payoffs to 15-1, a few others to 20-1 straight, 8-1 show and 4-1 place. Even with this protection they have their ups and downs. Last week, I learn, was a profitable one for the suckers.

A SURPRISING NUMBER OF ATHLETES and sporting men set great store by astrology—the star—science which tells you when the heavens are favorable to the affairs of individual humans

Jimmy McLarnin, who, after four wet-weather postponements, is fighting Barney Ross tonight in the Long Island Bowl, is one of these. Jimmy has learned, for example, that the stellar influence is against him tonight.

Roger Baker of Boston, the archangel of the Northeastern baseball league and patron of the many Rosebud teams, is another of these true believers. He seldom risks a sporting or business venture unless his star is reported to be sympathetic. Wes Ferrell, the Red Sox pitcher, is, or was not long ago, another. He used to kick strenuously when, with Cleveland, Roger Peckinpaugh ordered him to pitch, star or no star.

Yet once, in New York, when his celestial powers were said to be in the grumps, he pitched, much against his will, and shutout the Yankees. After that he lost some of his faith in astrology.

IN WORLD SERIES HISTORY ONLY 33 players have batted for .400 or more. The rival managers, Mickey Cochrane, who hit an even .400 in 1929 against the Cubs, and Bill Terry, who in 1924 batted .429 against Washington, are among them . . . The pathetic end of Dark Secret, Wheatley Stable's star three-year-old, adds another item to equine tragedy. Dark Secret on Saturday won the Jockey Club gold cup at Belmont ($8200 value). After crossing the finish line, Dark Secret stumbled, breaking his right foreleg. As he was destroyed, Belmont bookies were paying jubilant backers 10 to 1 . . . The college football doubleheader, tried two years ago, proved quite popular on the Pacific Coast. Saturday Southern California, [illegible] State and U. S. L. A. are each playing two complete games against different opponents . . . Eight college games are scheduled for Friday, all of them to be played under nighttime floodlights . . . Despite the German (Nazi) law forbidding its prizefighters to be managed by Jews, both Max Schmeling and Walter Neusel, only two German fighters of note, are handled by Hebrews.

KASE PICKS M'LARNIN BY K. O.

New York, Sept. 17 (AP)—Prospects were favorable today that the oft-postponed Barney Ross-Jimmy McLarnin welterweight championship would go on tonight.

Although it rained early in the day, the Weather Bureau said meteorological signs indicated clear and cool weather for tonight.

By Max Kase

New York, Sept. 17—Your agent has just returned from an interview with the weather man bearing gladsome and cheerful tidings.

That worthy, who on no less than four separate and distinct occasions tossed a very damp blanket over the Barney Ross-Jimmy McLarnin fight for the welterweight championship, this morning admitted he could no longer hold out to the tenacious persistence and stubborn determination of the promoters of the battle.

He said, in tone rather weary from constant reiteration, that the weather tonight would be fair although colder, that rain of last night and early this morning would be dissipated, and that the much delayed "Battle of Postponement" would finally take place this evening.

MORE HOLIDAYS THIS WEEK

His pronouncement brought loud cheers from the New York American and Journal Christmas Fund which is sponsoring the match, from the Messrs. Ross and McLarnin themselves who have been irked no small bit by four postponements, and by a large slice of the sporting fraternity, who have seriously come to doubt whether a pair of such individuals as Ross and McLarnin actually existed.

The promoters of the match will make every effort to have the thing go off tonight, now that the cooperation of the weather man has been promised

A postponement again this evening would force the match over until possibly next Saturday night as the Yom Kippur Jewish holidays intervene tomorrow and Wednesday, and Ross will not engage in any ring chores on such holy days.

ROSS 7-5 FAVORITE

The boxers were to weigh in at one o'clock this afternoon with Ross expected to come in slightly under 140 pounds and McLarnin just over 146

McLarnin had an unannounced and brief workout at the Pioneer Gym here on the week-end just to keep his keen edge. After the drill Pop Foster, his manager, announced Jimmy would easily make the weight.

Ross kept himself in seclusion and is understood to have had some light road work as his final prep.

The betting still makes Ross a 7 to 5 favorite but your agent holds to his original line of reasoning, flaunts the popular trend and picks McLarnin to win by a knockout.

One of the features of this "Battle of Postponements" is the limited number of seat cancellations despite the four setbacks. The promoters expect the fight to go over the May battle of the pair and gross around $200,000

Harvard Cubs Report Thursday

Harvard's freshmen are due to get an early start this season, for Freshman Coach Cliff Gallagher has sent out a call summoning his charges for the fall opener on Thursday afternoon, although freshman registration does not take place until the following day.

The book, besides including the Dartmouth contest for the first time, carries a priority in the same reserved seat at the West Point and Princeton games. The book price is $6.00.

Herman Gundlach, Harvard football captain and ace lineman, is shown as he appeared leading the Crimson gridmen to practice this morning. To fight or not to fight, muses Barney Ross as he stretches before arising. Barney might well have wondered, this a. m. in New York, where he is scheduled to fight Jim McLarnin tonight. Four times has the go been rained out. When the match finally goes on it will be a big surprise to the boys. (Picture by International News Photographer.)

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 17 Ken Willis, Princeton halfback and drop kicker par excellence, will not play this fall.

The annual Charles River C. C. women's invitation four-ball tournament was scheduled to start today.

Yale Loses Tackle

Gales Ferry, Conn., Sept. 17—Sid Stein, Yale, tackle, will be out of the game all season because of a knee injury.

CHALLENGER FINDS GOING HEAVY IN ROUGH SEA

tack with [illegible] the weather berth to [illegible] Vanderbilt [illegible] 12:1 [illegible] immediately [illegible].

Endeavour [illegible] her into the wind was working up to weather at 12:15 and appeared to be gaining on Rainbow.

At 12:40 Rainbow had a positive lead over the challenger, and crossed Endeavour's bow.

Both had held on the port tack for some time the defender being the first to go about, closely followed by Endeavour. Vanderbilt did not hold the starboard tack for long, going about again within a few minutes

RAINBOW IN LEAD

The maneuver furnished the first proof that the American yacht was ahead.

The breeze had moderated considerably but the sea was still unruly

Endeavour was decidedly stiffer than the defender while the wind remained strong. Her long bow made bad work of it, alternately diving into the sea and then lifting clear

At 1:15 p. m., an hour and 20 minutes after the start, both continued on a port tack with Rainbow well to weather. The wind remained steady and the sea rough.

They had completed approximately half of the 15-mile windward leg at that time, with Rainbow still holding a comfortable lead, and in the weather berth

Endeavour appeared to be footing faster but she was in a pocket from which Vanderbilt would not let her escape

After dropping away the breeze again appeared to be freshening to about 11 knots

The first race Saturday, was declared no contest when the time limit expired with Rainbow leading only half a mile from the finish.

Harold S. Vanderbilt, at the helm of Rainbow, again timed his start better as he had Saturday, and was across the line at full speed. Endeavour had to luff to clear the committee boat, toward which they both were bearing when the starting signal was given. He lost way

START DELAYED

The race was scheduled to start 10 minutes earlier but Endeavour fouled her mainsail on the first attempt to set it, and was granted a postponement

When the British challenger finally got the big canvas set it showed a slight tear near the upper edge, but it was not believed large enough to threaten the efficiency of the sail.

President Roosevelt poised himself on the starboard bridge wing of the Nourmahal, ordered binoculars and signalled full steam ahead for the starting point of the race

The Astor yacht, which the President is using as a floating White House, was equipped to keep him constantly informed of developments in the textile strike

At 11:20 a. m. the course signals were hoisted on the committee boat Wilhelmina, setting the course for 15 miles south-southeasterly against the wind and return. This was the same course the big boats traveled Saturday in the first race.

Rainbow was the first to set her sails. She had a mainsail and staysail up, with another head sail up in stops. Aboard Endeavour her crew seemed to be having some trouble with the mainsail, which was run up halfway and then doused

MAINSAIL TORN

With only 11 minutes to go before the scheduled start Endeavour had only a staysail set. Soprith sent a man aloft to clear whatever it was that was keeping them from setting the mainsail, and signalled the committee boat for a postponement.

At 11:40 Endeavour finally set her mainsail with a short tear showing near the luff along the upper batten

The 10 minute warning signal was set at 11:45. Both yachts were carrying mainsails and staysails with head sails in stops. They also carried their quadrilateral, or Greta Garbo, jibs.

Maritime Wealth on Display for President at Newport Race

By Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr.
Written for and Copyrighted by International News Service, 1934

At sea aboard Yacht Winchester, Sept. 17—Well, here we are right back where we started from [illegible] Ahead of us [illegible] the starting line. And all about us the immense fleet of private yachts and [illegible] ready again to witness this great game of the sea. Not [illegible] but also is Vincent Astor's Nourmahal.

The President is on the bridge [illegible] he keeps his eyes trained upon the contestants. Behind [illegible] of person he is he [illegible] about anything [illegible] of excitement. He [illegible] each and [illegible] with a devotion [illegible] fascinated [illegible]

NEWPORT ROCKERS

[illegible] Astors [illegible] refrained from going ashore in Newport thus far. From away out at sea, Nourmahal could easily detect the anvil chorus. Observers on the Astor yacht tell me that the President, nevertheless bestowed several lingering glances on the magnificent assemblage. Doubtless he has reflected that observing conditions cannot be as bad as the Newport knockers' intimate. If so many immense private floating palaces can be out upon the sea.

Where else in the world, what other country could put on such a display of maritime wealth? How then, thinks F. D., can the country be destined for the knockers. If we are going to the dogs, as some of these Newport people prophesy, the dogs have by no means caught up with the curtailment of million [illegible] dollar [illegible] Astor [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Mr. Boston Says:—

BLUE DAY WILSON'S BEST BET AT ROCKINGHAM

McLarnin-Ross Bout Like a Yacht Race May Yet Take Place

By Jack Conway

JIMMY McLARNIN and Barney Ross are hopeful of getting into the ring by Christmas.

The Endeavour and the Rainbow will try to finish their series of international yacht races before the snow flies.

Mr. Boston

Nobody cried "fake" when the opening race was declared "No Contest" when neither yacht finished within the time limit.

The boys and girls on the million dollar fleet which watched the race merely ordered another cocktail. The chief purpose of yacht races, I understand, is to give one an opportunity to have his favorite drink with a sporty setting.

The crowd at the international yacht races is much like the gatherings at Harvard-Yale races at New London. Nobody is much interested in the race. It is chiefly a social gathering, and you just don't belong unless you are present.

James B. Connolly, famous author of sea stories, told me it looks as if it is going to be another drifting contest.

Little Real Champion

LAWSON LITTLE, JR., who licked Dave Goldman in the final of the national amateur golf championship, is no idea of a great money player. He is as cold as ice under fire, and does his best work in the crucial moments of a match.

Goldman lacked the experience to give Little any kind of a contest.

The poor crowd at the final day of play was merely proof of the fact. Boston and New England golf fans realized Little was a 100 to 1 shot to win.

Manager Bill, Syriac, Fair Billy and other horses which showed at Narragansett and Rockingham are getting into the money at Havre de Grace.

Discovery once more proved it is a great horse when it came from behind to win the feature event at the Maryland track last Saturday.

The case of Brass Monkey, with Porter up, which won the eighth race at Rockingham last Saturday was another instance of where a horse was overlooked in betting. Brass Monkey is a bit short in races at a mile and a mile and a sixteenth. At a mile and an eighth and at a mile and three-sixteenths old Brass Monkey usually comes roaring home a winner.

FAVORITE IS TO CARRY IMPOST OF 109 LBS.

he would have undoubtedly been returned the winner, as he was catching Bedight with every stride.

Blue Day has been assigned the favorable impost of 109 pounds in tomorrow's race and will be pitted against a field of five opponents.

TIMBER TRUMP, PANBULA EMPLOYMENT

FIRST RACE—Semi claiming maiden three-year-olds and upward; five furlongs. Silver Wraith ..105 Crystal Ann ..103
Cameres ..106 Timber Trump ..106
The Rake ..109 Senator ..101
Sweet Beauty ..103 Special Favour ..106
Ebb and Flow ..109 Stafford ..109
Employment ..106 Transmitale ..114

ALSO ELIGIBLE

Panbula ..107 Nimus ..104

This is by far the poorest lot of the meeting. TIMBER TRUMP, a brisk morning worker, has been tightened up in better company. On past dope, she shapes up as well as anything else. PANBULA raced the barrier twice on New York tracks. In both starts, the daughter of Peter Pan forced the early pace, only to flatten out badly in the latter stages. Mayhap that she will carry her speed further in this company. EMPLOYMENT has displayed speed at times and may earn a money position.

JESSIE D. M., TEETER TOTTER, LOVITO

SECOND RACE—$800, claiming, two-year-olds, five and one-half furlongs.
Home Loan ..x109 Chewava ..108
Deadeye Dick ..x 86 Rymod ..111
Lovito ..x106 Jessie D. M. ..x108
Tuttimarti ..x107 Unawaui ..x104
Teeter Totter ..107 Hardware ..114
Ben Met ..x108

JESSIE D. M. shapes up as a standout in this affair. The Charlie filly has been showing a high grade of speed against the best juveniles in this section. TEETER TOTTER experienced bad racing luck in her last race. But for breaking poorly, she would have undoubtedly been returned the winner. LOVITO has been burning up the track in her morning trials and may come up a good thing.

PASS, PAPER PROFITS, KAI-FINN

THIRD RACE—$800, claiming, three-year-olds and up, six furlongs.
Merrotch ..x104 Fox Shone ..106
Paper Profits ..x105 Pass ..x108
Fearful Martha ..x98 Kai Finn ..x106
Unchanging ..x104

Pass is entitled to another chance. The O. L. Foster colorbearer was literally knocked out of contention while making his bid the other day. PAPER PROFITS finished three lengths in front of Pass in one in that affair and looms as strictly the one to drub. KAI-FINN, a flash away from the barrier, will be on the front end as far as he gets.

BLUE DAY, CRAZY JANE, EBONY LADY

FOURTH RACE—$1000, claiming, three-year-olds and up, six furlongs.
Crazy Jane ..111 Ebony Lady ..106
Blue Day ..109 Mumsie ..x100
Canterbrae ..x100 Marsh Bird ..x113

BLUE DAY will have CRAZY JANE to drub for ten points. The latter bested the top one at five furlongs earlier in the meeting. But she was receiving considerable weight in that affair. Tomorrow the Flippen color-bearer will be giving weight to BLUE DAY. EBONY LADY is handled by the astute Jack Howard, but raced only with only moderate success against $5,000 top and bottom platers around Chicago.

Marmion, Mad Frump, Dynastic.

MARMION, MAD FRUMP, DYNASTIC

FIFTH RACE—$1200, the Eagle Claiming Handicap, three-year-olds and up, mile and one-sixteenth.
Big Beau ..106 Marmion ..x106
Mumsie ..97 Mad Frump ..x104
War Letter ..97 Dynastic ..105
x2F Lock ..103
aC. V. Whitney entry.

The clockers report that Jack Howard has MARMION fit to run for a king's ransom. On best dope the Coldstream colorbearer should not experience much difficulty in reaching the winner's circle. MAD FRUMP was accorded excellent support against better ones in his last start, but failed to run to expectations. Mayhap that the Whitneyite will show to better advantage in this affair. DYNASTIC will be all dangerous if he runs back to his morning trials. The Greentree colorbearer was timed a mile in 1:39 several mornings ago.

FABIUS, BELOW COST, WAYLAYER

SIXTH RACE—$1000, claiming, three-year-olds and up, mile and one-sixteenth.
Vested Power ..x106 Below Cost ..111
Instigator ..x105 Red Badge ..102
Fabius ..x114 Waylayer ..x108
Lofty Lady ..109

FABIUS was the victim of a miserable ride the other day F. Maschek steered him into several blind switches and then lost considerable ground by racing wide during the ins stages. Prior to that effeort, the H. L. Campbell-owned thoroughbred drubbed a field similar to this with ease. BELOW COST is an in-and-outer, but on best dope the Flippen colorbearer shapes up as strictly the one to beat. WAYLAYER'S fast race should not be taken too seriously.

MYNAH, LAMPORTE, WILD DREAMS

SEVENTH RACE—$1000, claiming, three-year-olds and up, one mile.
Boy Crazy ..x108 Mynah ..x107
Alcorah ..110 Wild Dreams ..x111
Patina ..x99 Jessie ..x109
Karonita ..x101 Paddock ..x111
Muskoday ..x111 Lamporte ..x100
Yap ..102
x Apprentice allowance claimed.

MYNAH will have a route made to order for her in this affair. The Stimulus filly received her tightener a few days ago in a six furlong sprint. A repitition of that Narragansett victory would turn the trick. LAMPORTE is endowed with plenty of speed, but she is also a doubtful stayer. WILD DREAMS turned in a nice third several days ago and looks next best.

Increase Open Prize

Top prize in the Eastern Open golf championship, which is to be staged at Sandy Burr the last three days of the week, has been boosted from $500 to $1000.

Fate Drives Hard Bargain With Dark Secret for Victory

Destruction instead of the victor's laurels wait Dark Secret in this scene as the great Wheatley Stable's five-year-old racer wins his second straight Jockey Club Gold Cup on Saturday at Belmont. As his right hoof crashed to the track on the next stride, his leg snapped between fetlock and knee. The big roan was destroyed a few minutes later. Here he conquers Faireno, but rushes to destruction. (Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

DICK MAY ONE UNDER PAR IN P. G. A. TILT

By Associated Press

Providence, R. I., Sept. 17 (AP)—A driving rain, sweeping in off Narragansett bay, raised havoc with the early starters in the $2,500 New England P. G. A. open tournament, which opened today at the Metacomet golf club, but a majority of the ranking professionals were waiting until afternoon to play their first round.

Dick May, the home professional and first starter, set the early pace with a 36, one under par, for the nine, but the storm reached its height soon after May teed off for the second nine.

Bobby Jones of Detroit, the 18-year-old youngster who eliminated Francis Ouimet in the national amateur at Brookline last week, made the turn in 38. The new Bobby was one over par on the first two holes, but was one under perfect figures on the next seven.

Paul Runyan, the P. G. A. champion; Denny Shute, Craig Diegel and Ky Laffoon, four of the six members of the P. G. A.'s team which sails for Australia next month, were among the ranking pros.

$150,055 for N. H. in Mutuel 'Take'

Concord, N. H., Sept. 17 (AP)—The state has received $150,055 from pari-mutuel betting at Rockingham Park, Salem, during the period from Sept. 1 through Sept. 15, it was announced today by the State Racing Commission. Bets placed during this period total $4,287,293. During the full fall racing season of last year, the state received only $98,532.

Jack Delaney Fined $100 and Costs

Bridgeport, Ct., Sept. 17 (AP)—Jack Delaney, 34, former world's light-heavyweight champion, was convicted today of driving while under the influence of liquor and fined $100 and costs in Stratford town court.

Counsel for Delaney, who in private life is Ovila Chapdelaine, told the court an appeal would be filed. The fighter was arrested August 9 after a collision involving his automobile and one driven by Albert C. Hermann of Stratford.

Perry Aspires to Become Movie Actor

By Associated Press

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 17—Frederick Perry, world's tennis champion, would like to be a movie actor.

England's Davis Cup star, Wimbledon and United States singles champion, admitted today that if any studio mentioned a contract he would hear the remark the first time. It would need no repeating.

"Of course," he said, "I can't play in films in pictures, that would professionalize me and I should not like to be a professional. I'd much rather play amateur tennis.

"But I'd jolly well enjoy acting, only I'm not sure that I could make much of a go of the thing. One doesn't know about those things until one tries, don't you know."

H. C. TO MEET ST. ANSELM'S SATURDAY

By Walter Kiley

Holy Cross and St. Anselm's officially open New England college football next Saturday. The two Catholic colleges clash in the only attraction in this section. The game is to be staged at Fitton Field, Worcester.

On the face of things, it would appear that the Manchester, N. H., eleven would provide little opposition for the powerful Crusaders. But St. Anselm's promises to be much stronger than the usual run of teams starting their second season of varsity competition.

Coach Burton Bruce has 19 veterans, including nine lettermen, from the team which turned in an auspicious performance a year ago.

BACKS BELOW PAR

That team was able to hold Boston College scoreless for three periods. And the experience plus the addition of several new players, augurs well for its chances this fall.

Capt. Joe Grogan, a rugged boy, is pivot man. The ends are particularly impressive, veterans such as Boles Buchawski, Johnny Sullivan, Marcel Raiche and Leon Tinel.

But the backs may not come up to the same standard. Bruce has been forced to experiment to find his winning combination, although he has three good prospects in Charlie Pelonzi, pint-sized quarterback from Beverly, Gene Falco, an unusually fine defensive back, from Somerville, and Billy Meisel, home towner, who is perhaps the finest running back of them all.

YABLONSKI FINE PROSPECT

Holy Cross has a veteran team and some remarkable sophomore material. It has the makings of a truly great back in Joe Yablonski, a 200-pound line crusher.

Rex Kidd of Melrose, a star in his own right at Melrose high, Hebron Academy and Exeter, will get his chance to strut his stuff as quarterback before the game is over. One Mr. Canan of Springfield will get the starting call.

This Holy Cross team, led by the Holy Cross All-American candidate, Charlie "Buzz" Harvey, 218-pound tackle, looms as one of the strongest in the East. Only one veteran from a year ago, Capt. Reiss of Baltimore.

Well Named, Ringer!

HOUSING PLAN OPENS UP WAY TO BLISS

By PEGGY DOYLE

(This is the sixth of a series of articles explaining the new National Housing Act which, under facilities being developed by the Federal Housing Administration, enables home-owners in Boston and other communities to obtain inexpensive, easy-to-repay loans for repairing or improving their homes.)

That the Modernization Credit Loan plan is aimed not only to provide home-owners with an splendid business opportunity, but also an excellent investment in domestic happiness, is evidenced in several of the many letters of inquiry received by the Housing Editor.

One of these letters, written by a woman who describes herself as "A Mother of Five," is praised that in making her home more attractive and comfortable by means of this Uncle Sam-sponsored loan she expects her family to be correspondingly happier this coming winter.

She proposes to convert her unused attic into a playroom for all members of the family and to modernize the kitchen—an entirely practical plan.

MEETS REQUIREMENTS

Since her husband earns considerably more money annually than five times the annual payments of the proposed note (one of the requirements) and taxes, mortgage and insurance are all paid up to date, this home-maker should have no difficulty in securing a loan from a financial institution complying with the Federal Housing Administration.

Her home is in a good residential district and is worthy of the improvement expenditure she contemplates.

Another Boston property-owner, however, makes it clear in his letter that he has misunderstood the purpose of the National Housing Act, which is not to encourage unwise expenditure of money by property owners in improving property actually beyond the possibility of effective rehabilitation.

BASED ON INCOME

"It is vital that the property-owner should not assume an obligation that is too large—this individual seeks to borrow an amount of money on the basis of an income totally inadequate to meet the annual payments. This man obviously would be refused a FHA loan and for excellent reasons.

Following are a few of the letters received by the Housing Editor concerning loan plans:

"Being a reader of your paper since its beginning, I write you to give me details of the Modernization Credit Plan.

"I have a bungalow and garage at ——street, Point of Pines. The lot cost $1000, the bungalow and garage, $5000, and I have a savings bank mortgage for $2000 at 6 per cent. Originally intended for summer use only, my place is minus a heating plant.

REVISE PLAN

"With my income reduced to $25 a week, I would like to make this bungalow my year 'round home by installing a furnace, putting in storm windows, making some minor repairs and doing some painting. I believe that $1500 would take care of all this nicely. I have enjoyed A-1 credit although since my income has been lessened I have availed myself taking advantage of it.

"If the bank were to give me the $1500 I require, I could pay off $500, thus lessing the interest." M. G. L.

Dear Mr. L.:

It would seem that your present income is inadequate for the amount of loan you desire at the present time, but when the other sections of the National Housing Act are developed beyond the Boston Evening American for this information.

HOUSING EDITOR.

(Tuesday's article will discuss ways and means of increasing the value of property, thus promoting the comfort of your home.)

150 New Citizens O.K.D in U.S. Court

Judge Hugh D. McLellan, in Federal court today instructed 150 men and women on the duties of citizenship after they qualified with requirements of the naturalization laws. Fifty others, who failed in minor court cases, were questioned in another session and later admitted to citizenship. The oath of allegiance was administered by Clerk Frank Mason.

MAD MILLIONS

By Charles Grant

CHAPTER XXXV

When it was over and she had recovered a little, she had to tell him, "Oh, don't you see, it can't be—your family is so rich and grand, and mine nothing more than just respectable . . . Why, your father and mother would be terribly opposed—"

"Oh, they'll be nice about it," Seward said. "And I'll tell you what I'll do, dear. I'll go home and tell mother the news now, and then I'll come back here for you at lunchtime, and if she takes it the way I expect her to, we'll all have lunch together at our house, so she can meet you!"

"Ah, she'll never want to see me!" Cathleen prophesied sadly. "She'll be horrified to learn that you want to marry a girl like me!"

"And what girl is that? There is no other girl like you, darling. That's what I'll have to make her understand."

* * *

Mrs. Ingram was breakfasting in bed, with Mrs. Pepperling hitting strewn over the counterpane, as her son came into the room. She returned his morning kiss with calm affection.

"You look very well and happy today, dear!" she smiled.

"I ought to feel happy. Listen, mother, I have something to tell you—terribly important—"

"I wonder if I can't guess? You're looking so excited and flushed—Edmund, has anyone proposed?"

"Millions! No, mother, not Millicent. But somebody else loves me, and I've fallen in love—in spite of loveliness, I know you're going to be crazy about her because you and I always like the same things, don't we?"

"A WORKING GIRL!"

Laura Ingram's face expressed astonishment and judgment, mingled with apprehension. "And who is this wonderful young person dear? Do I know her?"

"I don't think so. But father does. She works in his office—" Seward hurried out. "That's where I met her. Now don't go up in the air!" he begged. "Wait until you've met her, wait till I tell you how about her!"

"A girl out of your father's office, a working girl! Seward Ingram, are you out of your senses?" I will never consent to such a preposterous marriage. Of course it's all your father's fault! He ought to have seen what was going on, stopped it—"

"He didn't have a chance to see and he couldn't have stopped it—he or anybody else. You don't seem to understand, mother. Maybe it's a little bit hard to understand until you know Cathleen. For one thing, you always talk a lot about how good and admirable Millicent Hinshaw is. But all it means is, she isn't wild, refuses cocktails and a few little things like that. Now Cathleen is good in a positive sense. She has a splendid character and she supports her whole family because Mr. McCarthy is out of work. She's always sweet and pleasant, and, why, she doesn't even smoke!"

"What was the name?" Laura Ingram asked faintly. "McCarthy, did I hear? A working girl! No, Seward, there is no use saying anything more about it. I will never consent to such a marriage!"

"But when you get to know her, mother—I thought of bringing her here today for lunch!"

"Get to know her!" Mrs. Ingram's eyes closed to mark her suffering, opened widely. Do you imagine that I am going to receive this girl? You will certainly not bring her home to lunch! If you do, I will order her out of the house!"

"You might find you'd ordered two of us out of the house—to stay out!" Seward said, deeply hurt. "I don't think you'd like it that way. . . I thought you cared about my happiness. I thought you'd be glad to know that I found the girl I can love with all my heart, that's going to be an inspiration to me and the making of me!"

Laura Ingram laughed disagreeably. "That's what you've found, is it? Do you suppose she's found? A young fool of a rich boy whom she's been able to ensnare. Why, Seward, can't you see, she only after your money!"

DREADS MEETING

Seward got up from the edge of the bed and stood a moment looking down at her quivering, angrily flushed face. He was bewildered and disappointed. But he said only, "I still hope you will take it in time, used to the idea you'll see things differently!" He turned and left the room.

He dreaded meeting Cathleen at the lunch hour, having to hurt her with the news that his mother didn't want to meet her. For this reason he was a little late in joining her by the news-stand at the corner of the Ingram Building. When he arrived he found her reading a paper.

She turned on him a face of white distress. "Seward, look! Have you seen this? The most abominable thing! It's about your father—"

He took the open newspaper and read a headline that sent the blood to his face. He walked back to his parked car and got into it after her, and when he had taken up the wheel so they could read together about the suit brought by Arline Martin against Jasper H. Ingram, for two hundred thousand dollars.

"She came into the office one day last week," Cathleen faltered intensely into his car. "Pretty, but—"

Arline Martin charged that Ingram had promised to make a star of her, producing her on Broadway. Believing his interest to be artistic and impersonal she had received him in her apartment and discussed details of the production. Almost at once he had shown his true colors had made feminine advances. She had repulsed her resistance to his advances. She could call a witness who had seen her in his arms—

"I was the witness," Seward said grimly. "That much is true. But she wasn't struggling any to notice—"

There followed a spirited account given to an interviewing reporter, of the scene in Miss Martin's flat. "I was powerless in his arms. His eyes gleamed madly. He was like a wild beast in his feral hunger, taking—taking all that I had, when I thought that he had come to give—"

"Of all the damned liars!" Seward choked. "My father may be no Sir Galahad, but he's no wild beast either—and I think it's surely rotten if this kind of thing can be printed about a man. And just imagine the effect on my mother, on top of—" he checked himself. "She wants two hundred thousand, does She! I hope he sees her starve before he gives her a cent! Sorry, Cathleen, I—"

"A POOR SPORT"

"You'd be a poor sport if you couldn't swear about a matter like this! I feel like swearing myself. Anybody can see it's all lies, because your father's a rich man and she thinks to get money out of him! It can't hurt him surely, for what believe a word a woman would say, that would shame herself in print like this, for money?"

Seward crumpled the newspaper and threw it on the floor of the car. "His father gone out to lunch, so I have to be asked. Who you mind waiting while I run up and talk to him about this?"

"Of course, you must go! And tell him not to feel too bad, for nobody that knows him will believe a word of this!"

Seward got out of the car and went slowly into the office building. For the moment his blossoming romance was clouded into the background. He was suffused with bitter memories of his own acquaintance with Arline, of his brief infatuation for her. And he was suffering remorse for the insults he had hurled at his father because of her. How he wished he had not held that resentment against his father ever since! that he had responded to one or two tentative advances from him towards a friendlier footing.

"He ought to have knocked me down," Seward thought, turning hot at the recollection of some of the things he had said that day in the office.

But it was not altogether that Ingram was being basely attacked that caused Seward to swing to him in renewed loyalty. Some of the warmth with which he was turning to his father was due to the fact that his mother had failed him.

The "immediate business" which the Marquis d'Alhues professed to Marian he had to perform in the service of the Infanta took him to a speakeasy in the vicinity of Washington square. There he sought a newspaper man with whom he had struck up an acquaintance. The man, who conducted a gossip column, knew a little about everything and everybody in New York.

"When a woman divorces a man in this country," the Marquis pounded to his friend, "say that he is a rich man, but also, as you call it, a piker, a lightweed and a cheap skate! Is there any way that he can avoid the payment of alimony? He has got himself nicely in the coop, but there is evidence of unfaithful conduct. But I think that this man would creep out of paying if he could."

KISSES HER GOODBYE

"He can do one of three things," said the press man. "He can pay what the court has ordered him to, or he can go to jail, or he can duck out, fly the coop, take to the open trail. It's not very hard to disappear successfully. But if this kind is as rich as you say, he couldn't afford to walk out on his business and would rather pay than lose the Alimony Club. But I didn't know there was anybody left that was rich, dere, dere, dayze."

"His name is Homer Alspaugh. He is associated with the great millionaire, Jasper H. Ingram. You relieve my mind for me," said the Marquis.

"Alspaugh — Alspaugh," murmured the press man. "Didn't Ingram let that fellow go? Sure! They're making the rounds of the papers trying to sell an inside story about Ingram's operations. We gave him the air. I shouldn't say he was rich. He may have made a good thing out of his connection with Ingram, but he's out of a job now unless he found another one!"

D'Alhues sighed heavily and changed the subject.

After a while he went back to Marian's hotel and spent several hours in love-making.

"I don't give a damn about the pearls—" Marian murmured languorously when he was taking his leave of her to see the Infanta and her party off. "You make me so happy, darling. I didn't know it was possible to be so happy. Good night, sweetheart—"

"Good-by," he whispered, kissing her passionately and regretfully.

"Goodbye until tomorrow," she corrected him. "Jasper Stevens, say. You know I like my breakfast about ten."

Marian's breakfast was brought to her in the following morning, and with it a morning paper. Over her coffee and grape-fruit she read that the Infanta Josefa sailed for Cannes on the Conte Grande, and listed among her entourage was none other than the Marquez d'Alhues. She smiled with amused superiority at the inaccuracy of reporters. They never get anything right.

She called up the shipping office and made sharp inquiries. The answer was positive. He had sailed. And though she screamed that it couldn't be true, she knew it was.

She took stock of herself. Yes, she was still pretty. But she was thirty years old. What could she do?

Homer! Poor Homer! He wasn't such a bad egg. He meant security. And he was blindly adoring.

Film Review Test

Robert Donat, star of the film version of Alexandre Dumas' novel, "The Count of Monte Cristo," now being shown at the Keith Memorial Theater, is sure to win favor with high school students during the reviewing contest. Pupils may win cash prizes by writing an essay on the film.

Here's an opportunity for Greater Boston high school students to win $25 cash!

All you have to do is write an interesting and dramatic review of one of the outstanding novels for the past 90 years—Alexandre Dumas' "The Count of Monte Cristo," which as a film is now being shown at Keith Memorial Theater.

The Boston Evening American and Keith Memorial Theater are awarding this new essay contest which will provide high school pupils lots of fun and a chance to earn some cash.

Students should be familiar with the thrilling novel by the greatest of French romanticists who made the phrase "The World Is Mine" echo down the centuries.

Only the pen of an Alexandre Dumas could write of the adventures of Edmond Dantes, who, the victim of a dastardly plot, is exiled as a prisoner on a lonely island, there to stay for years, until through the efforts of a kindly Abbe, also a life prisoner, escapes from his horrible dungeon with the secret of untold riches buried on the island of Monte Cristo.

With the riches his, Dantes returns to his native France as the Count of Monte Cristo and proceeds to mete out the punishment to the men who made him spend a prolonged death for years, and finally a reconciliation with his boyhood sweetheart.

All high school students can enter this contest by submitting an essay on the immortal Dumas classic by giving a concise and clear answer to the question, "Was Edmond justified in seeking revenge on the men who exiled him to a living death?"

The first prize awarded for the best essay will be $15, the second $5 and 10 additional prizes of $1 each for the next 10 best essays. No essay should be more than 200 words, and written legibly.

Manuscripts must be in the hands of the Monte Cristo Contest Editor of the Boston Evening American no later than midnight of September 26.

DEATH OF BOY DUE TO FIGHT

A Dorchester father's complaint that a supposed "leap frog game" in which his son was fatally injured was really a pool room fight led today to South Boston court arraignment of four youths and a man, all charged with manslaughter, arraignment of another as accessory after the fact of manslaughter.

The defendants, each of whom pleaded not guilty, were Alfred Duncan, 20, of Sidney street, Dorchester; Joseph McBath, 17, Dorchester street, South Boston; Michael Lockery, 19, East Sixth street, South Boston; Joseph E. Downes, 18, Dorchester street, South Boston, and Joseph Jelsk, 53, Boston street, South Boston.

Peter Wallengevie, 19, of Ninth street, South Boston, was arraigned as accessory.

Victim of the alleged poolroom affray was George V. DeMille, 19, of Newport street, Dorchester. He died of head injuries which the father, Martin DeMille, had been told resulted from an accidental fall while playing leapfrog.

Funeral Tuesday for Mrs. Kincade

Funeral services for Mrs. Anna Higgins Kincade, life-long resident of South Boston and until 1918, a soprano soloist and choir leader in South Boston churches, will be held tomorrow morning with a requiem high mass in St. Peter and Paul Church, Broadway, at 9 o'clock. Curley Has Vision and Action State Needs

MASSACHUSETTS demands a man of ACTION for her chief executive during the next two years.

There are no rockers on the governor's chair for the gentle lulling of economic and social unrest.

He will make the best governor who spends the least time sitting down.

It is not only literally true that James M. Curley seldom finds the time to sit down but figuratively true that he never takes a back seat.

In Mr. Curley's candidacy for governor are admirably combined the VISION and ENERGY the present "state of the state" requires—the VISION to initiate, dynamic ENERGY to carry through.

It is a simple enough matter to simulate action and many office holders have found it to be so, managing to fool the people part of the time. But the proof of ACTION WORTH-WHILE is to be found only in ACCOMPLISHMENT, RESULTS.

Boston elected Mr. Curley for its mayor for three long terms because he is a man of the kind of ACTION that brings monumental RESULTS.

He doesn't wait for other people to start things or to demand that they be started, be it legislation for the public welfare, vast public works projects, correction of existing evils. What he starts, he finishes.

ANY study of his three-term record of mayor should be made with the realization that many of its magnificent achievements were in the face of the most trying conditions, in one instance those resulting from war, in another those caused by the national depression.

It was Mr. Curley, as mayor, who brought about extension of Boston's transit facilities, construction of the Maverick square station in East Boston, the building of the subway under Governor square, providing work for veterans, saving Soldiers' Relief funds.

It was Mr. Curley, as mayor, who put through the $2,500,000 Strandway development in South Boston.

It was Mr. Curley, as mayor, who engineered the $11,000,000 development of Boston City Hospital with its $750,000 maternity building.

It was Mr. Curley, as mayor, who established the George Robert White Health Unit system and gave Boston first place in public health among the nation's big cities.

It was Mr. Curley, as mayor, who inaugurated the Old Age Pension System for city employes with a fund now in excess of $22,000,000 and 1600 on the retirement list at half pay.

It was Mr. Curley, as mayor during depression, who expended $28,000,000 for public welfare out of taxes—refusing to burden future administrations by borrowing—yet seeing to it that none suffered from cold or hunger.

Those are a few illustrations of the kind of action Mr. Curley stands for. The state needs that kind.

End Textile Strike

The textile strike is still unsettled, a great industry is temporarily paralyzed, and hundreds of thousands of workers recently busy are out of work.

Violence continues in various textile centers.

Twelve thousand National Guardsmen are on duty in five States.

The casualty list is already considerable, and will doubtless increase unless a settlement is speedily reached.

And there is the additional danger of strife spreading to other industries, with consequences which none can foresee.

The public calls on both employers and employes to get together with the President's mediators and end this strike.

It can benefit nobody.

It can—and does—menace the well-being of everybody, not only those involved in it but all Americans.

This is one time of all times for capital and labor to work shoulder to shoulder for real recovery.

The nation, gradually emerging from the depression, is staggering under the additional and senseless burdens imposed upon it by the wild "brain trusters" at Washington.

Of all the great nations of the world ours is the farthest behind on the recovery path, and industrial warfare will set us farther back.

The Morro Castle horror brought death to a few score and grief to a few thousands. The strike can affect the welfare of every man and woman and child in the United States.

Good Business News

Good news for the all-important New England fishery industries is seen in the latest Commerce Department statement that prices showed an appreciable increase over the latest twelve-month period.

The average price received for all fishery products landed at Boston, Gloucester and Portland amounted to 2.7 cents per pound, an increase of almost half a cent per pound over the average for the previous year.

Since no one has come along with a proposition to the New England fisherman to throw his catch back in the ocean and receive Federal largesse, as the Western farmer does for plowing under his crops or killing his cattle, let's hope the price for fishery products keeps headed higher. Along with our ability to buy them.

Banding the States

One of the most noteworthy projects of 1934 bears the unromantic name of "U. S. 4." And needs a better one.

It is the newly dedicated highway across Vermont, linking the Granite and Empire States with a direct route through the finest scenery of the Green Mountains.

There lake and pond smile back to sunny skies, and peaks push their shoulders into the clouds. Scene of Indian wars and glorious triumphs for our farm boy soldiers in days of the American Revolution.

Highways like the "U. S. 4" bring our States closer together, cutting down distance. They help to cement the Union —long may it live!

Progress and Profits

American business, seeking a market for citrus fruits, transformed orange juice into a popular beverage. Only afterward did science discover its value in preserving health. And now other scientists have learned that an acid made from citrus fruits can, under certain conditions, cure the dreaded haemophilia, pyorrhea and other ailments.

Enemies of the "profit system" forget that the quest of private profit often leads to benefits profitable to mankind.

College Days— -:- Class in Geography at the Cross-Roads -:- By T. E. Powers

Listen, World! -:- By Elsie Robinson

WHAT IS LOVE—A LA MODE?

She wonders—as every woman since Eve has done—"What is love"? Only there's a certain hardness in her speculation. She's very definitely what she wants love to be and not certain things—or she'll not include it in her budget.

She DOES not want to mean what it did to her mother and grandmother —housekeeping, receiving children, a narrow, monotonous job in which a woman aged and dulled before her time.

Elsie Robinson

No, above everything else, she wants love to be an ADVENTURE. Always thrilling, challenging, a little dangerous. Something that will keep life perpetually at the bubbling point—something that will make her senses tingle and her eyes shine at forty as they do at twenty.

And why—she cries—shouldn't she want love to be like this" Why should she be content with the drab existence her mother endured?

Would a man be content to run his business or farm as his grandfather did? Would he accept grandpa's humdrum social program? Of course he wouldn't! A modern man insists on living up-to-the-minute.

Then why should a 1934 girl be condemned to compress her lively needs and ideas into an 1834 rut? Isn't she as bright as a man—as reckless and resourceful? She certainly is! So what, she wonders, IS love, "for a girl like that." Not that "old Victorian stuff" but love A LA MODE?

What is love? The answer's simple enough, though it takes most of us years to find it and, even then, we don't want to admit it.

LOVE IS LIFE. Whether 1834 love or 1934 love—it makes no difference. LOVE IS ALWAYS JUST ONE EXPRESSION OF LIFE AND IT RUNS BY THE SAME OLD RULES.

"Love always an adventure—always thrilling, challenging, tingly, shiny!" A girl decides, but it can't be done. And that isn't because there's something wrong with love or the lover. The difficulty lies in ourselves—in the way we're made.

No matter how exciting the occasion or stimulating the companion, human emotions cannot stay on high. Man isn't that kind of machine.

Inevitably the tom-to-mmest jungle, or handsomest girl or man, will leave you cold and bored after the first excitement has passed. And it will do you no good to move over to another jungle—or another sweetheart—for presently you'll be back again "on low."

So what IS love, old style or new style." It is a dream, a desire, a delirium—at first. Then it is, inevitably, a deliberately sustained loyalty to a partner and a plan which you once decided were supremely worth while.

In his last, beautiful short novel, "Smoke of Battle" (June, 1934, issue of Cosmopolitan) Robert W. Chambers gives this definition of love:

"Two people," said Allan to that lovely young Eulissa who believed that love could not, should not survive if one were bored—"two people endure each other; endure the stupidities of life for each other; deny themselves for each other; die for each, sometimes. Caresses, passion, procreation are only tiny fractions of such interlocked lives. What holds them together is an interminable sacrifice called love."

The "stupidities of life"—blue days, bored days, cantankerous or desperate days—they're inevitable, whether we're married or single. Even if we could change marriage and the whole social system, they would still occur, for they are the inevitable result of our alternating emotional mechanism.

So, you'll just buck your head against a stone wall if you try to evade them. But—if you have what it takes, YOU CAN CASH IN ON THOSE DAYS.

To the man with neither plan nor partner, they're simply—lost time. But, if you can tie them up with that "interminable sacrifice called love," the dreariest hour will pay dividends.

Not in thrills, not in a fluttering pulse or shining eyes, BUT IN A PEACE AND PRIDE WHICH NO OTHER INVESTMENT IN LIFE CAN POSSIBLY BRING.

Love A la mode—that's what it is. Not a thrilly adventure, but a hard investment and an interminable sacrifice. Yet the greatest thing in life—IF YOU HAVE WHAT IT TAKES!

Widow Weds Again -:- -:- By Winifred Black

My friend was doing a bit of embroidery.

She was embroidering a wreath of field flowers on a bit of fine linen, and it was pleasing to watch her fingers weaving the lovely flowers like some necromancer bringing strange enchanted blossoms to life by some weird waving of a magic wand.

Winifred Black

"Did I tell you about Jimmie's wife," said my friend. "I mean Jimmie's widow, of course. You met her before Jimmie died, didn't you?

"He was such a nice chap, Jimmie, and so terribly good looking.

"Women were all so fond of Jimmie.

"And the woman Jimmie married was quite plain. Not wifty or rich or anything, and she was at least ten years older than Jimmie. How we all wondered about that, but she and Jimmie were very happy—don't you know how surprised we were about it?

SURPRISE MARRIAGE

"Well, I wasn't so surprised, not after Jimmie's wife and I went for a walk along the beach and she told me about herself and Jimmie.

"Jimmie has been devoted to me for a long time," said Jimmie's wife.

"I was in love with him, of course, but I told him it would be a great mistake for us to marry. I even made him go away for a year and try to find some woman who was young and pretty and witty—but Jimmie came back and said he would never be happy till I married him.

"So I told Jimmie all right, but he must promise me that if he ever fell in love with a younger woman, he would tell me honestly and I would set him free, so he promised me.

"We are very happy together now, but if the other woman should appear some day, I shall keep my word and set Jimmie free.

"And then Jimmie died, and she was broken-hearted.

Marry-Go-Round

By Helen Rowland

DOLLAR PRINCESS—OR BEGGAR MAID?

One of the strange phenomena of human nature is a "poor-little-rich-girl's" life that she will be married for LOVE.

Of course, there have been great roses and five-leaved calves. And there HAVE been penniless young men who have fallen desperately in love with beautiful heiresses, and married them in spite of their millions. But there is no truth in the old adage that it is as easy for a man to love a rich girl as to love a poor one. It is infinitely HARDER.

Somehow, instead of brightening up a woman's charms, a background of gold seems merely to dim them to the point of invisibility. Her fortune set dazzles a man that no matter how beautiful she is, he scarcely SEES it.

No matter how brilliant her mind or her wit, it can never outshine the glitter of her father's moneybags; and no matter how lovable and sweet her disposition, it can never rival the SWEETNESS OF DADDY'S "SUGAR"

That's why the "beggar maid" always catches King Cophetua—and why the Lucky-Little-Poor-Girl stands the best chances of getting a faithful, tender, devoted Prince Charming.

When a man marries a girl, who hasn't even a fat salary check to sustain her, it MUST be love!

Because he is practically signing up to keep his nose to the grindstone for the rest of his life, and his only reward is the bundle of curls, ruffles and lipstick which he holds in his arms.

It's funny, but it's true, that most girls look prettier in bungalow aprons or cheap slacks than in the fussy things they wear on "dress parade."

And when a man's mind is not on Broadway's, he has more time to enjoy a girl's repartee.

There is no blazing background and no halo of gold dollars to hide the sparkle in her eyes or to blind him to the flash of her smile or the glint in her hair.

She doesn't have to live up to a dozen trunks full of clothes—or to try to distract his gaze from her jewels to her dimples.

What there is of her is "all girl."

Besides, when a man is trying to work out the amount of dowry he'll collect and the best way to spend it, it's pretty hard to listen to a woman's wit. Her MONEY does the talking!

Those are just half-a-dozen chances which the poor girl has over the rich girl, of getting a real lover and real happiness along with a husband!

To be born with a golden spoon in your mouth may have been lucky, ONCE; but not now.

"That was about a year and a half ago. The other day I met a friend of Jimmie's widow.

"'How is Eloise?' I said.

"'She's terribly depressed,' said the friend, 'she just can't seem to get over her husband's death'."

"I was quite impressed.

"'I must go and see her,' I said, 'I ought to have gone long ago. Poor Jimmie, he really was a darling, I don't wonder she misses him terribly.'

"'Poor Jimmie?' said the friend of Jimmie's widow, 'why her husband's name was Robert! He's been dead two months!'

"And I discovered that Jimmie's plain, rather elderly little widow had been married again and widowed again, and I just can't get over gasping.

"Now what do you make of all this?"

I didn't make a thing of it, so I just sat and watched a spray of blue forget-me-nots grow under the magic of my friend's dexterous fingers, and that was that.

What do you make of it yourself —honestly now?

And all teens pretty, attractive, charming young women looking so lonesome in the tea rooms, and going up and down the elevators to their little lonely apartments in the big apartment houses all over town.

Puzzle it out, if you can. I'll admit I can't—no, not for the life of me.

Stars and Stripes

Until the textile strike, the expression "Rhode Island Reds" in New England meant only poultry. "Little Rhody" is still most proud of her famous hen strain.

After the Maine Legislature convenes, Pine Tree State folk expect to see other bars than those formed by the sands and members of the legal fraternity.

Scores were ill after a recent Wellesley banquet. This result has in other cases frequently been laid to after-dinner speeches.

The arms probe soon reached the point at Washington where silencers had to be employed.

Government bonds were recently reported "lower on selling." But at the same time every one of Uncle Sam's bonds that was sold found a buyer.

Human Side of the News; Our Changing Fashions

By Edwin C. Hill

Observant ship news reporters used to note, years ago, the tactful servants always folded the coats of the nouveaux rich with the lining visible. Thus the world got an eye-full of the Poiret label, and Madame, back from the grand tour, was not displeased.

There were two French words which Madame was sure to know—haricot verde and Poiret. They sufficed—particularly Poiret. On a garment it was a talisman; the edelweiss, hall-mark and imprint of a new imperial clan. Poiret was a name of enchantment.

"Paul Poiret is dependent for food and clothing upon charity and a decent daily unemployment dole," clicks the cable, apropos of nothing.

It is the "new, strange or unexpected" which makes news, and, thus wrenched from the context of events—years of depression and all they have wrought —it is unbelievable that the great Poiret is dependent upon charity.

CHANGING STYLES

France somehow, seemed to have found something immutable in the fame and artistry of its great couturiers, something carried over from the renaissance and the empire, something imperishable. Cleverly it nurtured its genius for design, and subtly it impressed on the world the belief that the only worth-while distinction lay in French gowns, in French fabrics, in some inimitable trick of line of climactic effect which only the French could master.

And, for centuries, the world has believed them. But, little man what now? Do their gowns and their couturiers belong in that limbo of "bagmen's delights" which their own Taine ridiculed so savagely?

There's nothing frivolous in the inquiry for idle looms and dead cities may fall in the wake of changing whims in women's dress.

However, much less errant than whim or style caprice are the clashing forces of the trade marts which contend for supremacy in the fashion world.

There's nothing whimsical about the iron-jawed Mussolini, and such fripperies as clothes are not readily associated with his career, but one of the first and most emphatic commands of his dictatorship was directed to the Italian dressmakers. They were to seize the style leadership of Europe.

The brilliant young Schiaparelli already was building her name and fame, and in the last few years she has snatched many a garland from the too complacent Paris dressmakers. Schiaparelli, the beautiful Titian-haired Jewess, life-time friend and counselor of Il Duce, has, with delicate tact and fine intelligence, helped Italy to put her best foot forward. As under her new gleaming fasces she moves out into the big world.

IL DUCE RESTRAINS

Seeing her in New York, in a big company a few months ago, a woman standing next to me whispered, "That's a Schiaparelli gown she's wearing."

So far as I was concerned, that was a matter on which one might write his own ticket, but even to his untutored eye there was in the Signorita's gown something which made one understand that clothes may be profoundly important, as the reflex of a national spirit and destiny.

Il Duce, of course, has imposed the severest restraint and decorum on the women of his realm, in the matter of dress, but that has not deterred him in flinging down a challenge to the rest of the world in design, in fabrics, in workmanship, or in flaunting the resurgence of Italy in the style tournaments, be it on the Corso, the Place de l'Opera, or Park avenue.

In Paris a few years ago, I realized for the first time the driving momentum of international style competition and the hard, factual dollars and cents, or francs and centimes issues behind the suave amenities of the style mongers.

I was privileged to witness a parade of the mannequins at the great Lanvin's. Women were cooing over the exquisite fabrics and lines and all was seemly and gracious—until I gained the confidence of a young American girl connected with the establishment.

"It's a game of dog eat dog," she said. "Our home-grown bootleggers are nice little fellows compared with the style pirates of Paris. You may not know it, but we looked up your whole career before we let you in here. Not only do they steal styles, but they steal labels, anywhere and everywhere they can get them, and stitch them in their imitation Lanvin gowns.

"Last week, we admitted a man from the Argentine, presumably a heavy buyer, who wished to place some large orders. We allowed him to examine racks of gowns. A young woman stationed inconspicuously to see what was going on, saw him stoop repeatedly to tie his shoe. He was seized, on his finger nail was a tiny razor-edged blade, and in his shoe were stuffed a dozen labels which he had cut from the gowns.

ALL OVER PARIS

"There are, all over Paris, style bootleggers, who, in an hour or two, can turn out a plausible imitation of one of our gowns. They bribe messengers delivering the gowns to customers. It takes them only a moment to photostat the gown, getting every seam and line or design, and frequently the bootlegged gown will be sold for one-tenth the price, and out on the street, before the orginal is worn.

"We have had many a case of angry women reporting they had seen on the street gowns especially designed for them, before they had a chance to wear them. The bootleggers swarm in Paris from every country in Europe. They are allied with manufacturers who work secretly and swiftly. Guarding style secrets and preventing the name of a house like this against espionage and betrayal is almost like guarding war secrets and fighting a war."

Poiret's passing may be just a minor incident in the struggle for style supremacy, but the names rise as the old ones sink.

Here's a full half column about the designs of one Augusta Bernard of Paris, in "presenting a divinely tall, slim line; accentuated by smooth satin, fabrics, broadcloth or crepe, in plain black or darkest shades of green, midnight blue, prune or grape.

Cable tells being what they are, it looks as if there was life in the argument still.

Hoover as a Critic

IT is with mixed feelings that one reads the criticisms of the National Administration by former President Hoover in The Saturday Evening Post.

He was the most conspicuous failure in American political history.

With four years of opportunity, he DID nothing, TRIED nothing and SAID nothing useful or helpful.

He was the hired man of the privileged interests.

In their behalf he asked Congress for extraordinary powers and began the encroachments upon popular rights, of which he now complains.

He gave France and England the chance to repudiate their debts.

He forced through Congress a moratorium on these debts, which relieved the debtors, not only of the payment of the agreed instalments on the principal of what they had borrowed from us, but even of the payment of interest—the reduced interest on the reduced principal of the obligations, which we, with a generosity now seen to be foolish and unappreciated, had cut in half.

He betrayed the interests of the American people to please dishonest international bankers.

FROM the political tomb, which he now occupies—with the wide assent of his countrymen—he seeks to offer his views as to the conduct they should pursue.

There is truth in much that he says.

The present Administration is embarked on trends that involve dangerous innovations and present a broad conflict with Constitutional principles which have served the nation well in the past, and to which great numbers of our thoughtful citizens —justly, we think—ascribe our strength, prosperity and commanding position among the nations of the world.

The established principles of American life, including equal justice to all classes and the maintenance of individual right, so essential to the preservation of American initiative and enterprise, will not lack defenders.

It is questionable, however, whether even these vital principles are served by a spokesman with the record of ex-President Hoover.

If Hoover is the best the Republican party has to offer as its prospective candidate for the Presidency, the best thing for the American people to do is to re-elect Roosevelt unanimously.
